Of course you didn't mention race. When you mentioned Harlem you were thinking about all of those middle aged white guys that live there weren't you! LOL!

He isn't wrong. What he is saying is that we shouldn't confuse the bottle with the contents. The format is the bottle, or the method used to deliver the contents.

A bottle doesn't much care what's in it. Neither does a radio format.

A radio talk show format may be:

a) Introduce guest (2 minutes)
b) Let guest talk and introduce themselves (4 minutes)
c) Take phone calls from the audience.
d) etc. etc.

What the guest talks about is completely isolated from the way or format in which it is delivered.

This is NOT a joke.I am watching WLBT tv news.A woman (Mary Jane Cain) in Mississippi found her 2010 census form laying on her driveway, right there on the ground where her driveway meets the road.
She said logging trucks passing by could have easily blown her 2010 census form away.

I Repete, this is NOT a joke.I saw it on WLBT 5:00 PM tv news this afternoon.

I'm quite sure that nobody throwing the word around has any inkling of it's meaning, and they don't seem to take a dictionary definition as any sort of guideline.

Fascism noun 1 often capitalized : a political philosophy, movement, or regime (as that of the Fascisti) that exalts nation and often race above the individual and that stands for a centralized autocratic government headed by a dictatorial leader, severe economic and social regimentation, and forcible suppression of opposition.

See also:

Autocrat noun 1 : a person (as a monarch) ruling with unlimited authority.

From Wikipedia:

Fascism, pronounced /'f??z?m/, is a radical and authoritarian nationalist political ideology.[1][2][3][4] Fascists seek to organize a nation on corporatist perspectives; values; and systems such as the political system and the economy.[5][6] Scholars generally consider fascism to be on the far right of the conventional left-right political spectrum,[7][8][9][10][11][12] although some scholars claim that fascism has been influenced by both the left and the right.[13][14]

Fascists believe that a nation is an organic community that requires strong leadership, singular collective identity, and the will and ability to commit violence and wage war in order to keep the nation strong.[15] They claim that culture is created by collective national society and its state, that cultural ideas are what give individuals identity, and thus rejects individualism.[15] In viewing the nation as an integrated collective community, they claim that pluralism is a dysfunctional aspect of society, and justify a totalitarian state as a means to represent the nation in its entirety.[16][17] They advocate the creation of a single-party state.[18] Fascist governments forbid and suppress openness and opposition to the fascist state and the fascist movement.[19] Fascists reject and resist autonomy of cultural or ethnic groups who are not considered part of the fascists' nation and who refuse to assimilate or are unable to be assimilated.[20] They consider attempts to create such autonomy as an affront and threat to the nation.[20] They identify violence and war as actions that create national regeneration, spirit and vitality.[21]

Fascism is strongly opposed to core aspects of the Enlightenment and is an opponent of liberalism, Marxism, and mainstream socialism for being associated with failures that fascists claim are inherent in the Enlightenment.[22] Fascists view egalitarianism, materialism, and rationalism as failed elements of the Enlightenment.[23] They oppose liberalism - as a bourgeois movement - and Marxism - as a proletarian movement - for being exclusive economic class-based movements.[24] They present their ideology as that of an economically trans-class movement that promotes ending economic class conflict to secure national solidarity.[25] They believe that economic classes are not capable of properly running a nation, and that a merit-based aristocracy of experienced military persons must rule through regimenting a nation's forces of production and securing the nation's independence.[26] Fascists support a "Third Position" in economic policy, which they believed superior to both the rampant individualism of laissez-faire capitalism and the severe control of state socialism.[27][28]

Following the defeat of the Axis powers in World War II and the publicity surrounding the atrocities committed during the period of fascist governments, the term fascist has been used as a pejorative word,[29] often referring to widely varying movements across the political spectrum.[30]

Just wait a little more. When conditions were good back around 2002-2003, I worked Palmer Station in Antarctica and Diego Garcia with 100 watts and a wire dipole at about 17 feet.

It was mid afternoon, I was tooling around the 20 meter band and I hear a fairly strong CQ Call. VQ9LA - I am thinking, Oh, a Canadian station so I leisurely give him a call back but the Q in the call is strange so I ask him for his QTH. The return: "Oh, I am sitting out here in the middle of the Indian Ocean" I was kind of stunned, but I managed to give him a report back. The QSL envelope had the US Navy stamp on it and that card is probably still my favorite.

I listened to a program of vocal music on 7440 Khz from 0252z until the transmitter went off at 0300z.

A woman was speaking in badly accented Russian(??) for a moment just before sign off.

I understand Polish (slowly) and can recognize Russian, but the woman's language was a very stong regional accent or dialect, not what you would expect from a Muscovite.

Does anybody have any idea of who or what I was listening to?

Pitcher Lare winds up and delivers a hanging curveball over the middle

"that was just too easy" during his home run trot around the bases.

It wasn't a Radio Rossii or some other regional outlet, was it?

Ha! Hey there RHF, hope all is well. You going to start posting here again? You may see that the group is a "tad" nicer than when you were last here. I forget when you actually left. I never had a problem with you but if you start posting again.......can you try an do one thing differently?

Try too not change the subject of the thread, I never thought that was a big deal, but if it's radio related - it kind of is because it's almost impossible to research the group to find something you may have been looking for, follow me? If not, welcome back anyway.:-)

I can't take any credit for the site, my involvement with the project is only that of an interested visitor.

From their website: "The History of WOWO.com is a labor of love by several former WOWO Radio staffers and Fort Wayne radio history buffs.
Many of the sounds and images on this site have been submitted by visitors like you!
We are actively seeking new material such as WOWO airchecks, jingles and photos. If you have any material, please contact us and share it!
We are also interested in your comments and suggestions on how we can improve the History of WOWO.com. "

And yes WLW is truly a historic station, it would be fantastic if a similar site devoted to it would be created.

I've sat in the studio while Bob Sievers (SK W9FJT) did his morning program and hung around the transmitter site when I was a kid. My grandparents farm was a stones throw away, and on occasion Grandpa would mow the area around the towers.

While tuning around on the 160 meter band yesterday, I copied the following rare station:

5U4GB on the Isle of Tung-Sol

It is my understanding that they are only on the air once a year, 1 April.

Steve, that is pretty close to my story with WLW, though I never actually "physically" sat in the studio.

My grandparents/greatparents built the first house in a area called Pisgah, which is right down the road from - - at the time - WLW's studio and their bad ass looking antenna emblazoned with the "WLW" letters (still there and used) on it. Of course with the VOA Bethany Shortwave Station right by it - it was unbelievable to see as a kid -
I had no idea what shortwave radio was when I was five/six yrs. old.

At night time it was nothing but lights and wires as far as you could see and the power from the VOA overrode my dad's old car radio when he pulled over to the side of the road - that's when it was explained to me by my Dad what the VOA was about. That is pretty cool childhood memories you have of there, I wish I could have sat in their studio as a kid.

That reminds me of John Kenneth Galbraith, who said that "Under capitalism, man exploits man. Under communism the reverse is true."

Seriously, though, the word fascism used to have a precise meaning, but that's been lost because the Republican and Democratic gangs started misusing the word as a pejorative term against each other.

As I wrote in my article "Everybodyï¿½s a Fascist Now!"

http://www.kevinalfredstrom.com/2009/06/everybodys-a-fascist-now/

The pop-definition of ï¿½fascistï¿½ is roughly ï¿½big, bad, scary, and mean authoritarianism.ï¿½

ï¿½Fascistï¿½ is used by the Democrat gang to refer to the Republicans and their often authoritarian views on (among other things) war, drugs, and sexuality ï¿½ and by the Republican gang to refer to the Democrats and their often authoritarian views on (among other things) freedom of association, financial privacy, and taxation.

Itï¿½s misused that way because both sides think they can make brownie points by scaring voters with the spectre of authoritarianism from the rival gang.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Excellent insights Kevin, and I think you are right - but there is still an original definition of the word "fascist" which Brenda has supplied, and it connotes a far worse political system than that wrought by either (or both) of the major U.S. parties of the 20th and 21st centuries. The word's misuse is really unfortunate; not only because it inaccurately and unfairly portrays either party or its adherents, but because it is designed to make the differences appear much larger than they, and to purposely avoid reaching common ground and working toward a common good, which the U.S. (and every nation, really) now so desperately needs.

Huh! You guys are lucky - all I had was a measly two-bit 1,000 watt station/xmtr in Gardner, Massachusetts - WGAW - to hang around at. We used to visit with Bob Maddox while he did his evening pop program at the station for the 10-or-so mile radius WGAW could normally reach.

It might have been more at night, but it was required to drop to 250 watts.

Here in California, R. Ukraine usually puts in a good signal. On many evenings, a decent signal from Europe, easily hitting S-9. Only Croatian Radio beats it, and that is relayed via Wertachtal, Deutscheland.

Last night, however, Radio Vaticana was a steamroller - for 30 minutes at 0250z it was "next door" on 7305 kHz, 41 meters - without doubt the strongest reception I have ever had from their Vatican City transmitter site. I did not bother to try the 6040 Canada relay.

Well, maybe not from McFadden (who is still a real person behind that bot), but perhaps from another knowing soul?

I guess it was inevitable - Due to excessive knob twiddling, switch-flipping and crouching in weird positions in the dark to better hear distant signals, I now have a repetitive stress injury in my right wrist - it's sore as hell! I guess I have to become a left-handed clumsy oaf for awhile. I suppose that I will now need to use LSB instead of USB, use lower passband instead of upper passband, and tune from high to low instead of low to high. This is gonna be a tough road to recovery...

Any and all advice welcome!

Ouch,

Your are not sure becasue that is exactly what Leftist-"Progressive"- Socialist-Communist propaganda lies are meant to do - OBFUSCATE.

Read the book by Jonah Goldberg: "Liberal Fascism: The Secret History of the American Left, From Mussolini to the Politics of Change"

AOR has a real tuning knob. Just a lot more repetitive injury immune operating.

And exceptional performance.

Some people spray it on their joints for arthritis pain relief. WD40 goes through the skin really fast. They probably do get some pain relief, but it's a real dumb thing to do.

WD40 rots your liver pretty fast if you keep putting it on your skin.
You can smell it on someone's breath about 10 or 15 minutes after they absorb it. That's how fast it gets through the system.

Don't do it. It's stupid.

Is any murder ever 'timely' ? If so, that reeks of predestination and

I quit the booze in February 2009.I probally have used WD-40 on my finger joint four or five times in my life.I don't think there is anything rotting out my liver.

There are people out there right now, spraying WD-40 on all kinds of things, and some of that WD-40 gets on their hands too.
What are you going to do? Outlaw WD-40?
Horse lininent would probally be just as good.

It looks like you are trying to make a point here, in a somewhat roundabout way, and really change the subject - which was that a man is about to be executed unjustly and that God have a bit of extra mercy under the circumstances.

If you wanted to pick on me, you would have been better off just pointing out that I made a slight redundancy - like if I said "unjust murder" for example - to which I would simply apologize for my error, and change it to "killed untimely".

No matter - this topic isn't worth discussing any longer. Like Burr says, "I'm gone" :-)

To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP013
ARLP013 Propagation de K7RA

Even though this bulletin may arrive a little early (due to the Good Friday holiday on April 2) jokesters are still too late for sneaking any first of April pranks into this bulletin. No matter when you read it, this bulletin is dated April 2 for good reason. Your bulletin editor serves as a solid wall against nonsense. Do not think of us as humorless, for your editor has enjoyed perpetrating many elaborate pranks, japes, and stunts, but never on April 1 (because that might give it away) and never in this bulletin (standing on principle). Also, we prefer to be perpetrators rather than recipients.

The solar report in Thursday's ARRL Letter attempted to correct some slightly faulty data regarding sunspot group numbers and their dates of emergence, but the result was more wrong than what it was attempting to correct. All of it is my fault. Now we see the problems, which included not looking back far enough to find the dates that regions emerged, and forgetting that the date of our source is the day after the date the data was gathered. The summaries are available for all to check at http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpmenu/forecasts/SRS.html.

Sunspot group 1056 emerged earlier than reported, back on March 17, and was gone on March 24. The area it covered (all areas are in units of one-millionth of the solar hemisphere) on March 17-23 was 20, 50, 10, 30, 70, 50 and 5.

On March 23 new sunspot group 1057 appeared, and through March 31 the area it covered was 5, 240, 400, 320, 380, 410, 290, 260 and 250. It is still with us.

On March 25 a small group, 1058 appeared, and only lasted two days. The area it covered was just 1 and 5. On March 27, group 1058 became a "plage without spots". What is a plage? In this context, not a beach at a seaside resort, but a bright region in the solar chromosphere, in this case minus any spots.

March 27, group 1059 emerged, and through March 31 the size was 120, 100, 150, 130, and 70. 1059 never became as large as 1057.

Average daily sunspot numbers for the week were up over 4 points to 28.9, and average daily solar flux changed from 84.2 to 84.9. The renewed sunspot activity seems constant and steady. We have new 3-month moving averages of daily sunspot numbers through the end of March, which is centered on February, and the number has increased a few points from last time. The 3-month moving average of daily sunspot numbers centered on July 2009 through February 2010 was 4, 4, 4.6, 7.1, 10.2, 15.2, 22.4 and 25.7. The rate of increase has slackened, but it steadily moves higher.

Last week we reported that the trailing 50-day moving average of daily sunspot numbers for the prior week was 27.34, 28.18 for the end of last week. This week, ending on March 31, the trailing 50 day average is 26.8.

No report yet from Geophysical Institute Prague, and the April 1 NOAA prediction is not available either, but the March 31 prediction had solar flux at 80 through April 2, then dropping to 75 (is that an expectation for zero sunspots?) for April 3-5, then back to 80 on April 6-10.

The report also predicted quiet planetary A index of 5 through April 5, then values of 7, 7, 8, 5 and 5 for April 6-10.

Sorry we are up against an early deadline here. Check next week for more propagation information, and perhaps a bit less solar data.

If you would like to make a comment or have a tip for our readers, email the author at, k7ra@arrl.net.

For more information concerning radio propagation, see the ARRL Technical Information Service at http://www.arrl.org/tis/info/propagation.html. For a detailed explanation of the numbers used in this bulletin, see http://www.arrl.org/tis/info/k9la-prop.html. An archive of past propagation bulletins is at http://www.arrl.org/w1aw/prop/. Monthly propagation charts between four USA regions and twelve overseas locations are at http://www.arrl.org/qst/propcharts/.

Instructions for starting or ending email distribution of this bulletin are at http://www.arrl.org/w1aw.html#email.

Sunspot numbers for March 25 through 31 were 25, 27, 30, 33, 32, 32, and 23 with a mean of 28.9. 10.7 cm flux was 87.6, 85.9, 88.1, 86, 83.2, 82.8 and 81 with a mean of 84.9. Estimated planetary A indices were 5, 4, 3, 7, 4, 5 and 4 with a mean of 4.6. Estimated mid-latitude A indices were 4, 2, 1, 4, 5, 4 and 5 with a mean of

Boy th4 Nazi influences down in Argiland are strong. Demonize your opponent.

"anti-intellectual, anti-civilization, anti-critical thinking"? What the fuck makes you think that you are intellectual, civilized and a critical thinker? Nothing you've posted so far would support that contention.

Most pointedly the simple fact is that this thread seemed to be about the fact that Obama's school records were unavailbale for anyone to see and that makes one wonder what he's hiding. Now of course to the Kool-Aide drinkers that doesn't matter so rather than answer it this has been a hate filled attack on the people who are asking a question that you cannot answer.

So what exactly does that make you?

I am pretty sure Art Bell does not believe that stuff. He does a good bluff, though, and it has always kept his listeners entertained. IOW, he's a fine showman in the grand tradition of P. T. Barnum.

Whenever Art Bell had a REAL scientist on, one could always tell that Art's real interest level would ratchet up a notch or two.

Caught Radio Wolverine on 6950 Saturday night 2200 CDT playing music on (presumably) his ham transceiver. Am I the only one who thinks music on single sideband sucks?

I miss the days of real pirate stations. These guys using ham rigs aren't that interesting.

Indeed it did, there is no way I'm going to go through and dig out all that info, I know me, and I'll start reading everything in site and it will be a couple weeks before I get to it.:-)

I'll find the links, it only takes a little time but I can't do it tonight or tomorrow. My Grandparentls - and by that I mean BOTH of them told me similiar stories of the The Nation's Station pumped out the wattage and their neighbors both basically said the same things.

You could hear WLW in your basement, you could hear WLW in your shower or bath when the water was either running or had been run (without a radio), you could hear them in the garage. My Grandparents weren't anyone to bullshit things or exaggerate a story to make it sound better and I know for a fact the neighbors wouldn't have done that - - plus the stories from my Dad.

The German's and Hitler felt that Cincinnati was the huge thorn in their side coming from the states. Ha!

Can you imagine? Half a million watts? Especially during the time when that area wasn't anything but farmland and cornfields...lol....my grandparents were right there. The look of that VOA Bethany Relay at nighttime was absolutely unbelievable.

Gregg, I have had copies of both in the past, and for what I did, PPWBR was the better book. WRTVH was and is tremendously useful, however, with a different format (stations are listed by nation rather by frequency). The EIBI and Aoki schedules, plus Prime Time Shortwave on the internet are perfectly good subs for PPWBR in that ascending freq format, but as far as I know, only WRTVH compiles all of the radio station mailing addresses in one place. I cannot recall if they have transmitter site addresses too - PPWBR did, and for die-hard QSL collectors, that was worthwhile.

I do not have the 2010 WRTVH - I think I will get one soon.

How about you?

I listened to a pirate tonight on 6925u for awhile, good strong signal here in California, with lots of old jazzy blues from maybe the 1930s. East to recognize songs, would have been an easy QSL if....

But I agree, music on SSB is a pretty bum, but in this case it was even worse - the station ID at 0230 was virtually impossible to copy because it was done with strong reverb and sound effects, and then they went to what sounded like ugly facsimile machine noises as an "interval signal" and went OTA without another ID or mail address.
Stupid.

In the 1930's, that was indeed a real accomplishment. Now, not so much.
There is a MW station (972 KHz) just a few Km from here that runs 1.5 MW.
And that's not even the largest in Korea. With even a stub of an antenna on my SW-8, it comes in at about 60dB/S9..

BTW> What you call a facsimile interval signal is probably slow scan television. A common thing now is for pirates to display an ID in Robot or Scottie mode Slow Scan TV. To decode it download MMSSTV. Its a free program that will decode the picture being transmitted. Of course you need a connection from your speaker to your sound card input to do this. And you need a decent signal to get a decent picture. Plus, it has to be running in the background so it will catch the header and go into the right mode. If you are not ready to give up yet, see this site to download:

4259. PAR Electronics EF-SWL Antenna

Anyone using the PAR Electronics EF-SWL Antenna please advise if a ground is necessary. Will using the PAR without a ground be any better than a 50' random wire? I live on the second floor of a condo and only can use a very thin hidden wire from my receiver to a nearby tree. No ground available. I read all of the glowing reviews of the PAR but all of them are using a ground. Unfortunately I don't have that luxury. Any other recommendations appreciated.
Thanks...Bob

Bob, a friend of mine has the ham radio transmitting version. It's half a trap dipole with a proprietary matching coil. We have some theories of exactly what the coil is, but they are speculation, so I'll leave it out.

As a dipole, you need two sides. PAR accomplishes this with the ground side of the dipole being ground. Since it connects to a coax cable, the feed is unbalanced, and so is the antenna.

In short it needs a ground to operate. Otherwise it is just a wire (with a loading coil) stuck at the end of a coax.

If I were you, I would make a ground at the receiver end of your wire.
The best would be a tuned counterpoise, such as 50 feet of wire connected to a cheap antenna tuner. Second best (but maybe not very different in actual performance) would be a multi conductor wire, such as a rotor cable, cut at various wavelengths.

From what I have read, the best length for a counterpoise wire that is not on the ground is 28% of a wavelength. Since you are receiving and not transmitting, length is not all that critical, nor is insulation.

The wire can be run around the floor of your room, even looped around if it is a smaller room.
The far end of the wire is a voltage node if you are transmitting and therefore needs good insulation. For reception, enough to prevent it from causing a short if it ends up in the wrong hole is good enough.

Since it will be "cold", it can be under a rug, etc.

For electrical saftey, I recommend that some sort of grounding (a wall outlet near the window is fine) is used when not receiving to prevent static build up or a nearby lightening strike damaging anything.

Geoff.

"Freedom", as practiced by your ilk, means letting Corporations do

The tea-partiers are tools of the corporations. They are the useful

What kind of receiver? Does it have an ANT IN receptacle? I'd say OTTOMH a 50' wire to a tree should work as well as anything in that location.

Dale at PAR will tell you that a ground helps but is not essential.
If the connecting end is high up in a tree, for example, it would be difficult (and perhaps not terribly helpful) to even attach a ground wire of adequate size to make it to a real earth ground.

I use one as a portable antenna, and I never use a ground. Most of the time it works pretty well, but it does pick up a lot of noise.

I thought it was the BBC but nothing listed. Could be a pirate but....15755 is the frequency for "The Disco Palace" a DRM station which is on now 20:20UT. 15750-15760kHz. It is supposed to be in Miami. Maybe they took a break from DRM earlier. At 1500UT they list a program called "top 3 of the UK singles chart"

I did not think they were giving out DRM licences to US stations.
Maybe its beaming offshore. No idea. I am listening to it now in DRM.
Playing Bee Gees. Good enough signal to support 20.96 kBits/sec - Stereo transmission format.

From PAR's website:

The Par End-Fedz are a full length half wave dipoles, but with an important difference. The coax connector is at one end of the dipole, where it is most needed. These antennas can be mounted horizontally, vertically or as a sloper. No ground plane or counterpoise is needed. Portable operation could not be easier. Simply hang the far end from a tree limb–the coax is at the bottom. Hang it up in a hotel window or string it up in the attic. End insulators are supplied making suspension easy.

Greetings, Pirate Friends, and Happy Easter!

The Crystal Ship will be taking to the airwaves this evening, at or about 2200 UTC, or 6 pm EDT, on 6876 kHz AM.
Transmitting tonight as usual with the Johnson Viking II, through our top-fed inverted-L antenna.

The show tonight will be OLDIES, meaning music from the 50s, 60s, and possibly a few obscure nuggets from the early 70s.

Hopefully most of the emails make it there before it starts, for a change....

Hello Bob,

Using a ground provision may reduce interference from domestic equipment inside the building. Without the ground the cable braid will "receive" interference from inside your home and transports this to the antenna.

Are you able to connect the coaxial braid directly to a large metallic fence on the balcony? If so, this will serve as a large local ground.
You may connect other large metallic structures to each other to enhance the local ground (and reduce interference). This will be better then using the safety conductor of the mains.

You may use a snap-on ferrite or other large ferrite core on the coaxial cable that runs from outside to your receiver.

I don't know the price of the PAR antenna, but you may experiment with just 40..50" of wire directly connected to the center conductor of the coaxial cable. When the noise exceeds the receiver's noise, the additional transformer will very likely not result in better signal/noise ratio.

Depending on the lowest frequency of use, you may add an inductor between center and braid to reduce the stress on your receiver caused by nearby lightning strokes. Off course it is best to disconnect the antenna in case of nearby lightning.

Best regards,

Here's another one!

EQUATORIAL GUINEA: R. Africa, 15190, 4 April 2010, 2150 onward, SINPO = 25311. Obvious enthusiastic sermon through about 2200, station ID at 2159, followed by folk-style (spiritual) religious music. Said to be 50 kW to W. Africa. First time heard for this listener. Allied SX-190, Alpha Delta DX Ultra. It's still on right now (2210, probably thru 2300) if you want to try it.

The basic innards haven't changed all that much, but the envelope technology definately has. The tubes they used in the 30's were huge glass bottles (R. Peking used to have finals that you could go inside of and change the elements, rather than replace the tubes!). In places where they still use tubes at all (not very many anymore), the things tend to be much smaller ceramic types. By far the most popular technology for AM broadcast is now modular banks of high power MOSfets.

Note that Radio Africa is via the Bata transmitter site and using the NASWA Country List it counts as Equatorial Guinea - Rio Muni.

Another site is Malabo, which is the NASWA Country of Equatorial Guinea - Fernando Poo.

Interesting detail; so Bata is technically in Rio Muni? Gotta get out

Here is my take on this common abbreviation: World Trade Fiasco. It occurs when the most advanced countries in the world think it is possible to compete with the developing or more often totally undeveloped nations or have them as business partners! The results are obvious-we now have so many people without any hope for the future like never before. And this is a fertile ground for maniacs that join the so-called 'tea-parties' or some other even more radical 'grassroot' movements...

IOW, we've (the United States, that is) become a third-world nation?

In the words of the immortal George Bailey, "I wouldn't be a bit

OTOH, it seems we're still a bit better off than North Korea.

At some time in the history of the earth it did in fact have years of ~400 days. It could happen again. I don't think I'll be around.

A theory is that the dynamic process of molten rock circulating from the core to the near-surface will decrease. Thus the magma cooling down near the earth crust, the size and weight of the earth will remain the same. But the shift in mass distribution of the earth will cause the earth-rotation to increase. (ref. an ice-skater spinning slower with the arms stretched out). We'll get much longer days. And more time to write junk mail like this on the net.

I'm running Sanyo "eneloop" in my Uniden TT 4/ 396T. a slow charge from my MAHA C808, bout 35 to 45 min. i get over 10 hours. these are 2K mAh, NiMH. under $10.00 for pack of 4. the cool thing is they hold their change, un used on the shelf a long time. so, in the long run, you get more for your money. i have never had any rechargeable last over 7 hours in the HH scanners. good luck.

I buy from www.greenbatteries.com. I bought a case of their generic AAs, and they seem to be working pretty well. One problem I have had with them is that some seem to have a sticky substance on patches of the surface, similar to the sticky stuff on Post-It notes. It rubs off, but before I noticed it I managed to glue a battery in the innards of my 7600GR, and had a tough time prying it out. Otherwise, they seem to work well.

Spent many good times at Fort Walton Beach/Pensacola area. When I was in the AF, we used to fly to Hurlburt Field/7th ACCS flying C-130s.
BTW, on the AMBCB, can you get WPHT 1210 clearly? Down here, there are Spanish speaking stations on every AM frequency on the dial. I can get Philly if I use my loop, but all the other clear channels can't make it down here due to the interference. There is a Cuban on 880, now there is a Dade County station on 880 also! WCBS is getting it from both directions.

Signal quality isn't good enough to bother for program listening, but I've picked up 7310 quite a few times here in Seattle.

The graphic charts of frequency by time by region that they may still have on the BBC Web site have transmitter location, (which the regional schedules in HTML don't).

(dig, dig, dig) They're still there. The chart pointed to by the link at <http://www.bbc.co.uk/worldservice/schedules/frequencies/#west-africa> shows 7310 kHz to be coming from South Africa from 4-6:00 UTC and Ascension from 6-7:00 UTC. (I didn't check the fine print, I hope that's current).

I am definitely a homer when it comes to my favorite AM station. No matter where you lived as a kid, more often than not, you have your childhood memories. I guess it really hit me when I was gone from home for four months out in Texas/ Utah/ Montana.

I didn't have any access to a computer so I couldn't hear my hometown, I felt homesick in a strabe way. But when I was in Texas I could hear WLW - and it was all good.

Here are some great links and great reading. I liked this part.

This brings up the real fun part of 1934 AM broadcasting - NO LIMITERS! WLW, like any big-time station at the time, gave the Full Monty: 100 per cent modulation. Now, radio textbooks always have cute little pictures of sine waves at 100%, but people don't talk in sine waves. They don't beat drums, play hillbilly music, or yodel in sine waves. If the studio asked the big rig for some outrageously asymmetrical upward modulation barely crossing zero at all, the DC-sucking beast said FEED ME and obliged - briefly. Voltmeters dipped at the power company, antenna current went haywire, cows felt funny tingles in odd places, and various shotgun-loud bangs and sparks filled the transmitter building.

Operators tried gallantly to ride gain by hand, but this was still not a good place to work if you had a fear of electricity. Transmitter logs were pretty exciting reading, telling of antenna-house fires, hurried repairs on still-dangerous circuits, and rushed replacement of various melted or exploded parts.

Eventually, RCA 1 was stable enough for commercial service, or at least as stable is it was ever going to get. WLW started giving walking tours of its transmitter. Wires were rented, straight to the White House, for a grand opening live on the air.

On May 2, 1934, anticipation mounted as Eleanor Roosevelt sang the praises of technology and world understanding. Back at WLW, a warning klaxon echoed through the buildings, as pumps and generators came up to speed. Outdoors, in the pond, water fountains began to spray. In the filament room, bells rang as operators zapped those big switches into place. In the contactor room, huge relays banged closed. The vast plant came alive. It was ready. And then, at 9:30 Central, came the moment of an engineer's lifetime, as FDR, the President Of The United States for Chrissake, ceremoniously pressed the same golden telegraph key that Wilson had used to open the Panama Canal....

Nothing.
The President and First Lady had forgotten about the transmitter's hard-programmed, 30-minute warmup every time B+ was cycled. The great beast came on-air, all right, but when it was darn well ready. At long last, though, a new signal lit up the air worldwide. It soon became clear that its potential night coverage was global, propagation and power supplies permitting. Crosley's popular "Moon River" program took one request from Buckingham Palace, England!

Ha! This site now has the other great links I was looking for at the bottom.

After looking again in the SW scehdules I notice that Disco Palace transmitter (relay) 15755kHz is on Bonaire in the Netherlands, Antilles. So that explains how they get around the DRM license.

* The Marlboro man (died of lung cancer in 19) didn't even like Marlboro cigarettes. He preferred to smoke Cools.

* Mother Theresa in her diaries (published after her death in 1997) revealed she lost her faith in God. She still continued to lie about it in public until her death.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mother_Theresa :
Where is my faith? Even deep down ... there is nothing but emptiness and darkness ... If there be God-please forgive me. When I try to raise my thoughts to Heaven, there is such convicting emptiness that those very thoughts return like sharp knives and hurt my very soul ... How painful is this unknown pain-I have no Faith. Repulsed, empty, no faith, no love, no zeal, ... What do I labour for? If there be no God, there can be no soul. If there be no soul then, Jesus, You also are not true.

* Kellogg's Cornflakes was made to stop young people from masturbating (!!) It didn't work.
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/John_Harvey_Kellogg

* Like many industrialists of the mid-1930s, Walt Disney had an admiration for Benito Mussolini.
It was not until Italy joined into the Second World War in 1940 that there was any major hostility towards Italian fascism in the mainstream USA:
http://coat.ncf.ca/our_magazine/links/53/roach.html

But Walt made up for his silly admiration with several anti-fascist films. E.g.
"Der Fuerer's Face" http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RNF86jBByDg&feature=related and "Education for Death" http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eU1LHeim_hA

But was he really deep down a anti-democrat? His troubles with his workers at the studios (especially the Jewish workers) and his perfectionist leader-style should indicate that (controlling every detail with most productions). But maybe he was simply motivated by profit (?) Make up your own mind. E.g:
http://www.straightdope.com/columns/read/1623/was-walt-disney-a-fascist :
The German filmmaker Leni Riefenstahl, whose documentaries in the mid-30s had helped to glorify the Nazis, claimed that "after Kristallnacht [1938], she approached every studio in Hollywood looking for work. No studio head would even screen her movies except Walt Disney. He told her he admired her work but if it became known that he was considering hiring her, it would damage his reputation.

If the Earth's rotation speed increases, we get SHORTER days. Days have been tending shorter. At one time within human existance, days were longer, and we had only 360 days per year (hence 360 degrees in a circle).

A slip-of-the-brain; I meant a "speed decrease".

Don't feel bad. Here is a list of stations that I can receive in DRM.
Not too impressive unless you like dance music and TDP and Disco Palace are on the internet minus the dropouts. Lots of dropouts today on 15 MHz due to solar activity.
I have not tried the Portugal relay. I tried Radio Australia but it would not lock in.

0100-0157UT China via RCI Sackville, NB 6080 kHz
1505-1704UT RCI Canada via Sackville, NB 9800 kHz
1900-2000UT TDP Belgium via Bonaire, Neth. Ant. 15755 kHz 1945-2030UT Vatican Radio via RCI Sackville, NB 9800 kHz
2000-2100UT Disco Palace Miami via Bonaire, Neth, Ant. 15755kHz
2100-2200UT RCI Canada via Sackville, NB 9800 kHz
2300-2330UT Vatican Radio 9755 kHz - Says this is direct - ??? doubt it

Regular shortwave was better. Heard a ham operator in China on 15 meters today.

Here in Israel, they are not generally available. Everywhere you go, you can find Recyco brand ones, from a Hong Kong company called GP.

The first batch I bought were packaged with a dumb charger, the kind where you put the batteries in and when you get bored seeing the green light stay on, you take out. Even with 24 hours charging, they never "filled" up.

I switched to an intelligent charger, but they were duds, and soon were dead. Since then, I have bought several sets, kept them in only in good chargers and they have been fine. I plan to buy more in the near future.

Due to the high taxes here, they are around $25 for a set of four, so I have not been rushing out to buy them. I will keep waiting for a sale.

The ones that do work, do so by having higher internal resistance than the regular ones. Less than alkeline, more than NiCad or regular ones, so they will not work in all applications.

From what I have read, there are only 3 factories that make them, so it is likely that the higher priced ones are all from Sanyo (or whosever they buy) anyway.

Thanks for the link, I need them and they are not sold here.

Jim, You're lucky - reception here is the pits today. Solar activity has almost shut 'em down except for the US religious broadcasters...
In fact, I noticed just a few minutes ago that 16m was the best of the lot.

What happened to Tadiran? Did they stop making rechargable

They are alive and well. AFAIK they have never sold consumer batteries, and in the 20 or so years I have seen their products, including the 13 plus
I have been here, I have never seen a retail one.

I've seen many of them in things, but never sold retail, even out of a box.

It's the same here. Middle bands are out. Only heard that one station on 21MHz. Could have been coming over the north pole. East-West propagation seems to be way down.

Looks like more of the same today. There are some good stations on 20 meters but they don't seem to be propagating out of Europe:

Usually there are a lot of entries in there by US hams but not today.

Guadalupe Victoria has been waking up for the past few months with a lot of M3 to M4 events. I was not surprised.

My house is 4 miles from the 1971 Sylmar quake epicenter and 10 miles those with no damage.

I am 13 miles from a very stuck section of the San Andreas Fault.

G3 Level Geomagnetic Storm -The solar wind increased to near 800 km/s because of an incoming CME and combined with a southward Bz, it helped stir up a Severe Geomagnetic Storm. The Kp index reached 7 at its peak early Monday morning and this indicated a G3 Category Geomagnetic Storm. Aurora contacts have been made on 6 meters. The opening could have been much bigger in North America had the incoming shock took place during the evening time Monday. Be on the lookout for Aurora at high latitude if you are currently located where it is dark outside.

From NOAA: A geomagnetic storm began at 05:55 AM EST Monday, April 5, 2010. Space weather storm levels reached Strong (G3) levels on the Geomagnetic Storms Space Weather Scale. The source of the storming is an Earth-directed Coronal Mass Ejection associated with a weak solar flare that occurred in Active Region 1059 on April 3 at 05:54 AM EST. This is expected to be an isolated storm that should subside quickly. Other than the flare and CME erupting on April 3, this active region has not produced any significant activity. Systems that can be affected include electric power systems, spacecraft operations, high-frequency communications, GPS, and other navigation systems.

SAf is pretty close to antipodal for us West Coast guys - but considering their beam direction and the likely pathways, not too surprising that we hear them.

Here near San Fran, all of BBCs relay XMTR sites - Ascension, SAf, Oman, Thailand, Singapore and so forth - can be heard at least once a day (on most days) with more or less good reception. Yesterday was an exception that rule, but ... solar storms being what they are...

In fact, the larger S. African stations are largely dependable - VOA Botswana, DG Rwanda, CVC in Zambia, and the Madagascar relays.

Here near SanFran, the only BBC relay that does not make itself regularly audible is the Seychelles site. Back at the top of the cycle, they were fairly regular, but I don't expect that to return for another year or two. Let's hope they are still on there at that time...

Thanks for this - some of us have been noticing that the higher freq bands, 16/15 m and up, were the better places to hang yesterday.

The former encouraging, the latter troubling. May the former hold true when the latter holds forth.

Here I sit on the margin of SF Bay about 2.5 miles from the Hayward Fault (home of the "next big one") and about 14 miles from the San Andreas Fault (which may still have a "little" time). This reminds me
- I should get that quake inspection and a few upgrades pretty quick.

Last night, April 5, I noticed very weak signals on many of the usual powerhouses in the 41 meter band and they all had a fluttery sound like playing a radio into a spinning fan. The 49 meter band was good but static crashes prevented too much assessment there.

Some of that San Francisco area was built many years ago when they sank some old wooden Ships (after going around the Horn from East to West.Go West young man, go West ~ Horace Greely) and then pushing some sand and dirt and who knows what else? on top of those Ships.Land fill, dontcha just know?
Yah, you betcha! How San Francisco was built.

We have quite a bit of fault creep on some segments of the Hayward Fault; but not the whole thing, and not nearly enough to relieve the strain. That potential energy still builds, and I am afraid it will become kinetic when we least expect it.

So, what's the Rose Canyon Fault? Is it a fairly separate large fault (like the Hayward), or a parallel closely-related strand of the San Andreas?

And, can I hear it on 25 meters? ;-)

So...(tapping foot)...tell us where! ;-)

People who actually use a "time"-related reference for navigation (astronomers) use an hours-minutes-seconds system in place of longitude, not a days/degrees system. Astro coords are usually in degrees of declination above or below the equator (+/- 0-90) for latitude, and in hours/minutes/seconds of right ascension

(HH:mm':ss")
for longitude around the rotating circumference - essentially a variation on polar coordinates. 1 hour of RA = 15 degrees, 1 degree = 4 minutes.

So the name of the newsgroup is a dated term? From what I understand the word "global warming" is still used by the media, even by believers. Most people are finally admitting it's not-warming-everywhere "climate change" now?

Also, you in the group keep referring to the effect of CFCs on the ozone as "dated", I know they are banned now, but I was referring to how only using the word "warm" could link the climate change issue to holes created by greenhouse gases in the minds of non-intellectuals (such as politicians). Thus "Global Warming" becomes a platform plank where we need to (de)regulate business activity based on more than just short-term health problems. "Climate Change" is harder to prove.

I do think it's pretty terrible that in the USA, in the year 2010, it is possible for this kind of preventable accident to happen again. That company ought to pay a lifetime of restitution to the families whose breadwinners they recklessly employed.

Here is what doofus-in-charge Blankenship said:

"I think every accident should be prevented, that's what the definition of an accident is," said Blankenship. "Once we know what happened, we'll know whether it was preventable by someone or not."

This guy is a walking oxymoron. EVERY accident is preventable unless it is deliberate sabotage. Period. No explosions occur where the ventilation reduces the volatile gas level to low enough amounts, and this company did not make the appropriate effort to ensure adequate ventilation.

Hello Bob,

Universal Radio mentions USD 66.95 for the antenna. It is probably worth the price, but it doesn't mean it is better then a home brew construction or give better reception with respect to your current setup.

Spring has arrived and noise (from new electronic devices) increased (on a very fat strip dipole in the top of the attic. I decided to try a similar setup as you are considering.

As floating ground I used the metal frame (about 8' * 3.5') that holds the windows. The antenna is 25' of wire with d=3mm and leaves the house at a height of 14'. It runs partly horizontally and party vertically.

The transformer/common mode choke has same functionality as the PAR antenna. In addition I can disable the 1:9 impedance transformer (while the common mode filter remains). I use a narrow band tunable preselector to avoid "noise" from intermodulation products.

Especially on the low HF, reception (S/N ratio) is better then with the dipole under the roof. Signal output is significantly higher. Bypassing the 1:9 impedance transformer does reduce the signal output, but doesn't change the S/N ratio. So the improvement in S/N doesn't come from the 1:9 transformer, but just from the outside wire with respect to the indoor strip type dipole. Note that the dipole also has a 1:9 transformer with separate common mode filter.

The dipole, in some cases, is better then the outdoor wire with 1:9 transformer and common mode choke (less signal output, but better S/N ratio).

Maybe this info can be helpful to you with regards to the purchase of the PAR SW antenna.

As I said before, a friend of mine has their ham version, which is what I base the following comment on. The quality of construction and materials used is very high. It is not an antenna that your average guy is going to duplicate for a lot less money.

Assuming I could figure out the wiring for the loading coil and the traps (his has traps, I don't know if this one does), I could duplicate it, but it would look like something someone with knowledge, but little skill had built (becuase it would be built that way).

If I were in the US, I would buy one. Since ordering things like this is difficult, and delivery services cost a small fortune (an order sent via UPS or FEDEX would cost at least $50 and probably $20 in taxes), I would make one an live with what I had. :-)

Can you describe it better? a 1:9 balun as it were is easy to make, and 1:4 VHF TV/FM radio ones are getting harder to find, but are still out there.

No doubt. I was just making the point that gas isn't the only explosive in coal mining. And that explosions occur where gas may not.

One of the advantages of strip mining is that such preventatives are more easily managed and implemented. Although, with the disastrous impact on the local environment that strip mining is known for.

I spend a summer every year, and occasional weekends the rest of the year, doing photographic work for an immense global mining company that's cleaning up sites they've inherited through the acquisition of other companies.These sites aren't even their work, and are often closed for decades prior to acquisition. And yet, the company moves in, sets up community outreach offices, and begins soil testing and remediation operations of their own volition, at their own cost.

I get to see some of the profound scars left behind by these operations, not only from the mining operations, but the ore processing and subsequent smelting, as well. One waterway, recently cleaned up, glowed orange before they began. Another had settled toxic metal waste across the landscape for miles around a smelter that hadn't been used since the 30's. The cleanup is extensive, expensive, and meticulous. All of this being done voluntarily at the company's own expense. My purpose is to document their work. For newsletters, annual reports, and various filings.

Working closely with the departments within the company addressing these areas, I get to see the commitment to the cause, and the level of responsibility taken by these operations. It's an amazing thing to see. An exciting thing to be a part of.

It's a shame this dickface in Virginia puts such a hideous face on an industry in which there really are responsible players.

Hello Geoffrey,

As far as I know the proposed antenna is a single wire (without traps) in combination with a 1:9 impedance transformer. www.parelectronics.com/swl-end.php shows some details. It uses a two-hole ferrite core and is for receive only. You can disconnect the antenna side ground from the 50/75 Ohms cable braid to optimize for minimum noise.

The one I made myself is an autotransformer with a separate common mode choke. The autotransformer enables me to extend the useful bandwidth downward without getting too much leakage inductance.

As my transformer has no galvanic isolation, I needed a separate common mode choke. The common mode choke is a series circuit of 2 wound ferrite cores. The first core with RG174 has best performance at the middle and upper part of HF. The second core with RG174 coaxial cable has its highest common mode impedance around 3 MHz.

If you need further clarification, don't hesitate to contact me.

Kyrgyzstan in crisis as clashes escalate

AFP's Matthew Siegel at Bishkek protests: "People said that they'd been shot"

Anti-government protests in Kyrgyzstan have escalated violently, with 17 people killed as police clashed with demonstrators in the capital, Bishkek.
Protesters attacked President Kurmanbek Bakiyev's offices and stormed
the state TV and radio headquarters, taking them briefly off air.
There are reports police fired live rounds after failing to disperse people with tear gas and stun grenades.
President Bakiyev has declared a state of emergency in protest-hit areas.
Leaders arrested
The unrest broke out in the provincial town of Talas on Tuesday and spread to Bishkek and another town, Naryn, on Wednesday.
In Bishkek, protesters attempted to storm the president's office but were held back by security forces, who reportedly fired live rounds into the crowd. The health ministry and an opposition leader said 17 people had been killed.
The minister of health said 180 people had been injured, but did not say how many were police or protesters.
State media and television went off air briefly after protesters stormed their offices but resumed broadcasting under government control.
The protesters in Bishkek appeared to be leaderless, says the BBC's Rayhan Demytrie in the capital, after a number of opposition heads were arrested overnight.
Earlier, police had used tear gas and stun grenades to break up crowds outside an opposition headquarters but the protesters overcame the police and marched to the presidential offices in the city centre.
Police cars have been overturned and set alight and officers attacked by the crowd, some of whom were armed.
Gunfire could be heard crackling through the centre of Bishkek and photographs from the city showed bloodstains on the pavement.
Several dozen activists and opposition politicians rallied in the capital of Kyrgyzstan on Monday in protest against what they say are government efforts to block the broadcast of U.S.-funded radio and television programs.

Critics of President Kurmanbek Bakiyev say the government is trying to silence Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty's Kyrgyz service, known locally as Radio Azattyk, as part of the authorities' attempt to stifle independent reporting.

Since coming to power in 2005, Bakiyev has tightened his grip over the impoverished former Soviet nation, prompting fears of deepening authoritarianism.

Dale at PAR advertises that his matching transformer is wound on a binocular core...but he does not go into precise detail. You'd have to buy one and disassemble the unit casing to find out.

This looks like a basic good design, but it is different from PAR's.

Anyone using a proper security program or HOSTS List on their PC will find anything to do with "blogspot" will not show. The same for people using OpenDNS. Blogspot is known for having users like yourself that just spam newsgroups all day. So it's considered a pest and suitably blocked.
If you can see "blogspot" I advise you to check your security settings.

With all major browsers except MSIE, you can set the cookies to automatically clear after leaving the browser, but a hosts file helps protect against invisible GIFs and so-called "Flash cookies"

Firefox addons Adblock Plus and BetterPrivacy do a great job at blocking such stuff out.

Doesn't work like that.

Say you go to www.ShortWave-Steve's-Blog.net who joins Google AdSense and places a banner ad on his site. When you load the page, you load both www.ShortWave-Steve's-Blog.net and www.Google.com.

Just like Shortwave-Steve's-Blog knows your IP address and REFERER, Google does as well because you loaded the same page.

Google knows you went to a site with "Shortwave" in it and then advertises shortwave radios for sale. Google will leave their infamous DoubleClick DART Cookie on your machine as well.

As you move around on the Internet to other sites utilizing Google AdSense banners, Google knows you went there as well. For instance, visiting www.London's-Tourism.net might result in ads for the BBC, since you previously went to a site about shortwave radio.

You don't have to click on anything.

"Flash Cookies" are even worse. They call them "LSOs" to get around the laws on cookies, as they cover all browsers using Flash, unless you have an add-on like BetterPrivacy the only way to delete them is through a hidden section on Adobe's Web site. Many advertisements use Flash as well (notably the buzzing mosquito ads)

Be prepared to freak out:

Thanks Jim - I have two compound questions about this diagram that he does not answer in the FAQ:

1 - In this wrapping technique, does the 50 ohm node at upper left lead electrically to the 450 ohm node at upper right, or the feedline ground? I assume the latter, but...this technically creates a half-wrap somewhere, which would give either 2.5 or 3.5 turns. Same for the 450 ohm node. It is not obvious from the diagram or the text.

2 - Is it automatically assumed that the feedline ground also goes to a ground rod (somewhere?), or just the coax outer conductor? What happens if there is no radio ground, just one at the antenna ground, or vice-versa? What if both grounds are at the same rod?

Just wonderin'... :-)

GERMANY: DW relay VIA RWANDA, 7240 kHz, 8 April 2010, 0405 onward. SINPO = 35423. EE with news. Despite the propagation (not selective fading either), surprisingly good signal overall on an evening when the bands are generally very quiet - barely a peep from any European stations. Gonna look for Ethiopia and Uganda again tomorrow morning on 41m, maybe.

UNITED KINGDOM: BBC via AFRICA, SOUTH, 7310 kHz, 0409 onward. SINPO = 35423. Ditto comments for above.

I noticed that CVC ZAMBIA, which was so potent (SINPO = 45444) on its published frequency of 9430 the other evening in EE, was nowhere at published OTA startup of 0400-0410, not even a faint whistle on sideband. I will look again at 0500.

I am not sure what the solar storm wrought, but the bands are almost noise-free and propagation is very path-specific tonight.

Just checked 9430 again at 0503z, and lo! There it is...

ZAMBIA: CVC International (UK-based), 9,430 kHz, STRONG - SINPO = 45434. EE DJ playing Christian rock and pop mx.

Here is what their schedule says...

9430 CVC INTERNATIONAL (1Africa) 04:00 - 06:00 1234567 English 100kW
315 degrees Lusaka

So, either their antenna is not aimed at that angle from 0400-0500 (unlikely, since not even a het was heard), or else they are not on the air until 0500, despite their sked.

Liberty Net for Week of April 3-10

http://3950.net/2010/04/liberty-net-for-week-of-april-3-10/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE EASTER WEEK Liberty Net was a session full of cheer, friendship, sharing (of both good spirits and information), and camaraderie in the face of some intentional interference. This venerable net is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on (or near, within about 10 kHz) 3950 kHz SSB.

Here is just a tiny selection of highlights from this weekï¿½s Liberty Net, brought to you by Net Control Station (NCS) W1WCR. The times indicated are from the beginning of the recording:

ï¿½ When you have a country with bad demographics, you will inevitably have bad politicians. This is always the downfall of democracy. (13 minutes)

ï¿½ Should an IQ test be mandated for anyone who wants to run for Congress? (14 minutes)

ï¿½ A doctor in Orlando put a sign on his door saying ï¿½changes to your health care begin right now, not in four years ï¿½ if you voted for Obama, get your health care elsewhere.ï¿½ (16 minutes)

ï¿½ Why did Barack Obama pick the ï¿½Black, African-American, or Negroï¿½ box on his census form, since he is evidently at least half Caucasian? (20 minutes)

ï¿½ Is Koch Industries funding ï¿½climate denialï¿½? Their founder was an early supporter of the John Birch Society ï¿½ but doesnï¿½t that indicate sincere patriotism, rather than any kind of conspiracy? (34 minutes)

ï¿½ How did Colin Powell ï¿½ and how do other members of the Washington elite ï¿½ get paid for a few years in the low six figures, and yet end up worth some 40 million dollars? (1 hour 5 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are some Americans so Neanderthal that they are not joyful about converting America into a Third World country, with a Third World president who rules like a Third World President? (1 hour 20 minutes)

ï¿½ Are the lawsuits by a few state attorneys general opposing some aspects of Obamacare just a way to lull Americans to sleep in the false belief that their interests are being represented? (1 hour 25

minutes)

ï¿½ Why was the recent murder of an American rancher by illegal Mestizo immigrants not covered at all in the major media? How would they have reacted if the roles had been reversed? (1 hour 45 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the letter from an alleged patriot group threatening to remove state governors from office actually a ï¿½black opï¿½ run by the federal government, as was Hal Turner and his incendiary radio show? (2 hours 30 minutes)

ï¿½ The very worst kind of ï¿½racistï¿½ is the kind that wants to wipe out entire races ï¿½ and most of the media moguls and the Washington establishment fit that description. (3 hours 9 minutes)

Check-ins begin at the start of this weeksï¿½ recording. Thanks to the dedication and hard work of N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR each week, you can listen and chat live via the Internet whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. And you can download the Net mp3 files right here at http://3950.net and listen at the office or in your car ï¿½ anywhere and any time you like.

You would have 3 turns on one side and technically 2.5 turns on the feed side but this would be completed in the connection to the radio. Same for the other connection to the antenna. 9 turns on the opposite side and 8.5 turns to antenna. This is how I see it.

Since there is no ground available the feedline ground just goes to the coax outer conductor. Connnect the antenna and feedline grounds together at the balun. Also, try them disconnected. Whatever gives the least noise, best signal.

If something close to ground like a window frame or metal railing is avaliable connect that to either or both ground connections. It depends on where the noise is coming from which will work best.

Whatever you do, always disconnect the antenna if there is lightning in the area.

Hello Bruce and others,
[large text]

You make one complete turn when you pass both ferrites.

When you start from the left side (that is the 50 Ohms side), you end at the left side also. So when you use green wire for the left side, you have two green wire ends at the left side. For the secondary side, you start from right en ends at the right side.

One full turn is like putting a hairpin through the cores (as mentioned in the article).

The purpose of this type of transformer is:

#1. To get more output from a wire (and also more interference that comes from outside). Mostly (in the receiving case), {wire length} < 0.25 lambda. Therefore the wire has relative high impedance (>> 50 Ohms). The transformer reduces the mismatch. Where the wire length is about 0.25 lambda + n*0.5 lambda, your wire has relative low impedance. In that case the transformer increases mismatch and this will result in less output. This is mostly not a problem as interference/noise coming from the antenna > receiver's noise level.

#2. To separate the antenna circuit from the common mode coaxial circuit to reduce indoor interference from domestic equipment.

When you connect both grounds together and have a high impedance ground, the coaxial common mode circuit partly shares the antenna circuit (they have the ground impedance in common). When indoor interference couples to your coaxial cable, this interference is coupled to your antenna via the common ground impedance. By connecting "coaxial ground" only to the coaxial braid (and not to the ground provision outside), there is no common ground anymore. This reduces the coupling between common mode indoor interference on your cable and the antenna.

The challenge with unbalanced antennas is to find a (floating) ground that is relatively clean. Large metal surfaces can act as ground, even when there is no physical connection to mother earth. In my experiment I used a large metal window frame. I will try to connect this to the window frame on the lower floor.

What if you have no large metal surface at hand? You can create one artificially with wire (wires in star connection). You can omit the ground and connect both grounds of the transformer together (so you get an autotransformer). In that case, the cable that runs from the transformer to your receiver functions as ground provision. If this cable is several meters long, this will result in reasonable receive signal strength. But there is a big however.

You decided to use an outdoor antenna (maybe) to reduce noise/ interference level. By using the cable braid as ground, your antenna is partly inside your house again, as the cable is now part of your antenna. When you like, you can use this transformer with a dipole also. For the case that {dipole size} << 0.5 lambda, you get more signal and noise output.

The problem with the design of these transformers is the trade-off between low frequency response, capacitance between sec. and prim. and high frequency response. When you use a ferrite toroid and keep sec. and prim. apart (no overlap), you create lowest coupling capacitance, but worst high frequency performance because of leakage inductance. When you want good low frequency performance (for example down to long wave), you need sufficient turns to get sufficient inductance, however this comes with increased coupling capacitance, hence reducing the transformer's ability to separate the common mode cable circuit from the antenna circuit (at higher frequencies).

There are several reviews about this type of transformers that they reduce interference significantly. If it does, it is mostly not because of the transformer ratio, but because of the isolation between primary and secondary (when you don’t connect the grounds together).

When the interference that reaches your antenna comes from outside, the transformer increases signal as well as noise, and you will only gain S/N ratio when in the old situation the receiver's noise was dominant.

Historically, the ancients knew the earth revolved around the sun in a little more than 365 days. A degree of arc was chosen to be 1/360 of a circle because it had many divisors, i.e., 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 15, 18, 20, 24, 30, 36, 40, 45, 60, 72, 90, 120, 180, and 360.

Well, here's a little surprise...

After I received my February QSL on March 3 from R. Prague in only ten days, I shot them another message quickly to thank them for their rapid response, and to give them just a brief "attaboy" for their excellent signal on that day at about 0227z on 7355 kHz. I don't think I included any program details at all, just a report of a good signal.

So here comes another QSL, also in very short order, for that incredibly brief report. This one has a photo of Czech Poet Karel Hynek Macha.

It pays to be nice, and R. Prague is very generous with it's QSLs :-) Now, let's not take advantage, OK?

Wim,

In a few paragraphs you have covered so much. Excellent information about grounding and excellent points about ferrites and coupling at different frequencies.

If we had a few more people like you Wim, we would have a lot more people in this newsgroup. Hope you stay around. Thanks.

While waiting for new QSL's thought I'd post a shortwave related ham radio QSL:

HE3RSI
The last part of the call stands for "Radio Suisse Internationale" Amateur Radio Club HB9MM operating using the Broadcast antenna of Swiss Radio International before it was torn down.
The antenna was 62.5 meters high / weight 135 tons / gain 18-20dbi Cool! Back in the good old, bad old Cold War days :-) Remember the way they used to sign on in choppy slow English with that stuffysounding lady, "This - is - Ray-dee-oh Pra-a-a-a-gue" and then to invite letters at transmission end she'd give the address in sing-songy slow motion, except for the last word which she'd say at high speed, "Czechoslovakia!" How essentially Communist! :-D

Thanks, Dave - let's see, where was I at 3:40 PM - I think I was here at home in San Lorenzo near Hayward, east bayshore. Did not feel it, although I see someone in Contra Costa County noticed it. We don't get much shaking from most quakes - even a 5.0 within 15-20 miles only gives us a tiny notice. Not sure why - must be the specific location. People all around us will say, "Feel that???" and we say "Feel what?"

Parkfield is the place where the USGS has a seismograph network set up because quakes of a specific size - around MM 6.0 or so IIRC - have happened there with considerable regularity. However, the last predicted "clockwork" quake there was supposed to happen several years ago (it did not yet occur), and nothing bigger than yesterday's 4.0 has been recorded there since (that I know of). So, maybe this one has the seismologists buzzing...a foreshock of something bigger to come?

A MM 6 in Parkfield would get folks excited. A MM 7.0 there would give Gilroy/Hollister/Monterey/San Jose some trouble, and maybe SF too. And of course, an 8 there would get LOTS of attention.

DxAce's note about "digging out" his first Radio Prague QSL prompted this curiosity in my mind - How do we store our QSLs? Do we treat them like gold or so many old scraps of paper? Tack them on a wall? Keep them in a file box?

I put mine in acid-free clear poly pages in a binder(s). Nice and convenient, both sides are visible and they should last pretty well...at least until nobody is left alive to care about them any more :-)

I had a bunch when I was a kid in Massachusetts in the 1970s - no serious DX, really, just big international broadcasters (R. New Zealand with's its little bitty transmitter - was it 7.5 or 15 kW? - was an exception). I think my Mom tossed them one day when I was away at school, or else she gave them to my sister for whatever reason. In any case, they are gone, along with the cool station pennants. Wish I still had them.

I'm not in favor of allowing illegal entry any more than the next guy - but saying it's an act of war, or saying that every illegal entry of some poor schnook looking for low-wage work to help his family "scrape by" is somehow comparable to actions in the border drug war, is a bit overboard.

Surprisingly, the Red Cross didn't supervise the rapes, tortures and murders committed by US servicemen either. They also weren't there during the multiple aerial bombings of wedding parties and civilian apartment buildings.

Let's not even start on all that depleted uranium which they're not collecting. Iraq will be producing mutant babies for the next two hundred years.

Not quite the same thing and proved incidents of abuse of civilians are punished. But, and this is important. Merely claiming some atrocity which can't be investigated cause the bodies can't be disturbed cause they're Mooselimbs doesn't cut it.
And "wedding parties" consisting of armed asshats are fair game as are asshat occupied dwellings which for some reason are usually kept full of civilians who'd probably rather be elsewhere given the choice.

Depleted uranium? And what pray tell was the source of this?
The famous and non-existent "depleted uranium bombs". Big hint idjit. DU is used in armo(u)r piercing rounds. You only need those if you are targetting high end armo(u)red vehicles of which the current crop of asshats have precisely none and what few were encountered taking down Sodom the Insane were in a few localised areas. And not all of them were killed with DU penetrators.

I have owned Perseus for 5 months now and it has been on DXpedition to our Seefontein Atlantic West Coast site. I am mainly a BCB MW and NDB beacon LF DXer. The Perseus is operated next to my marvellous Icom IC-7600.

Perseus is a top class performer and has all the bell's and whistles of an expensive conventional receiver. It's filters are top line and I found the NR noise reduction even better than my Icom. It is just as good as the Icom at digging the most difficult stations out of the mud and is a top class DX machine. It is particularly good at finding those elusive weak NDB beacons on LF.

Owning Perseus requires you to have a top end laptop, otherwise it will not be able to successfully record the wide 1.6 MHz span, a major feature of Perseus. Also you have to do something about the sound, as the laptop just doesn't produce decent audio. So, be aware that buying Perseus is not the end of your financial outlay.

Taking Perseus on a powerless DXpedition is a pain - you have to have power for your laptop and Perseus requires a quirky 5v DC. I did kit myself out for all this and captured some good TOH top of hour recordings of the MW+LF band. Analysing these recordings afterwards yielded a mixed bag. On the plus side I was able to log stations with good ID's that I had not found with the Icom, but I also had some good ID's from the Icom that were simply not heard on Perseus. But it's swings and roundabouts - what you loose on Perseus due to it's lack of sensitivity and high noise floor, you gain from the extra stations you hear resulting from recording the full MW band at TOH.

Perseus is not as sensitive as the Icom and introduces more noise, plus the recording seems to add further noise, that is why you loose some of the weaker stations.

I am from the older generation and not very computer literate. Perseus requires some good computer knowledge to install properly and do the updates that come along. This is reflected on the Perseus news group as the number of software queries is quite large. I would have expected the suppliers of this not inexpensive SDR to supply "auto run" software and updates for the many computer illiterate users like myself..

All in all a worthy SDR which I give 4 stars out of 5.

This, for me, is a dealbreaker when it comes to high end SDRs. They do require top end computers. They also require frequent updates, and after enough updates even your (currently top end) computer will again become obsolete. No thanks.

But I run my Perseus with a Acer netbook. I don't do any recording, but for listening the Atom processor is sufficient.

A top end computer is not necessarily a requirement.

They specifically require DirectX to run the soundcard DSP. I am not going to spend $250+ for the privilege. Intel needs to write a DSP routine that runs on Linux.

Even with the cost of a computer and software the Perseus is pretty reasonable. The filter performance exceeds the majority of receivers

Last year that B HO ButtKisser who lives catty corner across the street from doggy's couch, he pushed his pawn shop $65.00 lawn mower over to my house.He rattled my screen door, he Hollered, SHOW ME WHERE THAT OIL DRAIN PLUG IS!!!

Last year, he BROKE my chainsaw, but he doesn't care.He said, (last year when he BROKE my Remington electric chainsaw) I am an old country boy from Edwards, I know all about chainsaws!

I had to show him (old country boy from Edwards) about eight times how to turn it on, and at least five or six times how to keep the chain properly adjusted.

For my SWBC QSLs,
I have a padded fake leather, bound volume that holds about 50 QSLs, Each sleeve has a black paper divider that allows two QSls in each sleeve.
Got it from Gilfer in the 70's.
The sleeves are just big enough to hold those oversize QSLs that Radio Portugal used to issue.
I wish I could get more.

My amateur QSLs go in a plastic box about the size of a shoe box. Box and lid 94 cents at Wally World.

First gas engine lawn mower we ever had was back around 1953 after my family moved to Jackson in 1949.It was a second hand gas engine lawn mower my dad bought at a gas station.I thought that gas engine lawn mower was the greatest invention since sliced bread.That old reel type lawn mower that I used to have to use was reel tuff, mowing that reel tuff grass and reel tuff weeds.I own an old Keen Kutter reel type lawn mower, it is in very good condition, I bought it many years ago at a junk shop.I don't use it though.

The first chainsaw was developed in 1830 by an Orthpedic/Surgeon guy in Germany.It was a hand cranked device for cutting bones.I bought my first gas engine chainsaw (McCulloch chainsaw) back in the early 1970s.I didn't break it either, it finally wore out.

I recall someone on on of the rec.radio groups mentioning a morse code sending-accuracy program that rated the user on how well they were tapping out morse code. Forget where I saw it and the name. Perhaps someone here knows of such a program. I would like to know such a program to help me refine my code sending.

I saw a similar program (or so I think) on a video by GHB key makers in an instructional video about keying morse code:

Hi,

For anyone using SwLog program:

Been a while since I've done this, so am undoubtedly doing something wrong, but I just can't seem to find the correct approach to importing the new A10 Eibi schedules.

I pull up the freq. formatted, text listing from their site.

I then click on the button that says: Import data from file.

(should Ibe doing a SAVE of the file first ? If so, I can't find any icon or button to allow me to do a SAVE, though)

Then a screen opens (C:\\Program files\N30EA\Shortwave log) up that has a tab on the top that says: Import Eibi broadcast schedule.
But, the only two items that now show are: DSP Plugins and License_LGPL.

So, I have been going around in circles with this.
Will blame it on my age.

Could someone please outline, exactly, the steps I should be doing to import the new Eibi ?

BTW: Other than Eibi, what's the "best" other schedules to use for general HF monitoring ?
Has Prime Time been updated yet ?

Much thanks,
Bob

Much thanks,
Bob

OK, this isn't about SW, but I figured some of you would have experience with weather alert radios.

I'm looking for a good tabletop S.A.M.E. weather alert radio that can be configured to receive only the type of alerts I want to hear. For example, I don't want the radio to be triggered by amber alerts. Most of the reviews and specs I've found online don't say if specific alerts can be blocked. I don't care if it receives AM/FM broadcasts or not.

Do you guys have any recommendations?

The Midland model which has AM+FM in it (silver in color; blue display) I believe can be programmed to respond only to certain alerts by alert type. I think it's model WR300. I have a different model, but a relative has one.

Amazon.com has a WR301, which is the same electronics; just a different case color.

Both are about $50.00 US. Retail suggested price may be $60 by now in some places.

I think cell phones can be programed to receive weather alerts only, as far as weather alerts are concerned.Check with your local radio and tv stations about that.
I don't have a cell phone, so I don't know.

I don't have SWlog but sounds like you need to save the file in that N30EA or Shortwave log directory first. Find which directory has the old eibi.txt in it.

Next with the Firefox browser you would do this: Go to Eibi site.
Click on the text file to open it. Click on edit, select all, which highlights the whole file. Then click on file, save page as, and go to the location you want to put it and save it there. It should save as a text file by default. Now try to import the file. Hope this helps. I just did this to update my radio program.

With Internet Explorer you right click to get to the same commands, I seem to recall.

Best other schedule is Primetime - was updated April 1, 2010

I'm just going to give you my take on it because at one time I wanted the same thing, the receiver with the SAME.

Hopefully it works well for you. I know why people (most people) want the one with the SAME technology. I don't know what state you live in or how far or close your different counties are - or for that matter the terrain in your area. But just be aware, that if you are just using your SAME receiver and you don't have your local tv stations on or your local radio station - - that a very bad storm can jump on you before you know it.

I bought the Rat Shack SAME weather radio maybe in 02-03? It was either the first or second that had that technology (I think), and worse of all - I bought it for a friend for Christmas because it was one of the five gifts I had him write down and I would pick which one of the five for him. I wished I hadn't done it.

I programmed it for him just the way he wanted it, make a long story short - by the time his radio alerted his wife - it was too late and a huge storm was already on his area and tore the crap out of his house and two barns and it was a close call for his wife and child. I had explained to him - I'll program it for the county/counties closest to you. But he wanted none of it - he and his wife didn't want to hear "false alarms."

So, just use common sense. Myself, I own the older Midland Weather Monitor Model# 74-109
It is the most sensitive weather radio I have owned (I've owned three). Many don't want one like I have - hence the SAME Technology.
But I have mine hooked to an external antenna maybe 18-23 ft. high along with the regular inside antenna which I can switch back and forth. I can hear of storms three counties to the east / four to the south/ four to the west and not so sure how many to the north - I know two for sure.

Enjoy your weather radio.:-)

Just have to ask. Why do "posters" just pop in here out of the blue with no posting history on usenet whatsoever and show up in RRS and ask simple questions. All they have to do is google their answer. If this is legitimate, I 'suppose' there will be some answers. But I kind of just shake my head with questions like this, it almost makes me think it's 'someone' who has posted in here before and had not too great of a response/responses - and in a weird way - just by someone in this group conversing with them in a 'normal' manner gives them a sense of accomplishment. Almost like making small talk when they already know the answer. Just saying. {?}

Probably for the same reasons that the preponderance of people get their news and information from TV, rather than doing a bit of reading and getting the straight information on their own: They prefer to be told, rather than make up their own mind.

Especially, if someone is new to shortwave, and techologically illiterate, a recommendation from someone who may have superiour knowledge is more reassuriing than taking a blind stab at a choice out of hundreds of options, with a dizzying array of information to wade through.

There was a guy here, more than a decade ago, named Tim, who came in like rolling thunder, demanded answers to a lot of questions, blustered huge opinions out of his ass, pronounced himself an expert on shortwave, and then blasted Bob Grove mercilessly for a weekend based on nothing more than the revision numbers and dates on the circuitboards of his brand new SW-8. He went on for nearly three days about how Grove had sold him an old model. He called Grove and screamed at the person on the phone, threatened legal action, and then came in here and ranted to exhaustion. All based on a lack of knowledge. Had he simply done some cursory research, he would have found that his radio was, in fact, brand new, current and of the latest production batch.

But he didn't know. And it took 3 of us, here, to talk him off the ledge, put right the damage he'd done to Bob Grove, and to educate him on the nature of radio production, how to read serial numbers and to look up production runs.

With guys here like you and me, and Ace, and women like Brenda Ann, and a couple of others over the years, there's a LOT of information available to fresh RRS recruits, just for the asking, without the misunderstandings that may come from ignorance and access to Google.

There was one kid, and this goes back about 15 years, now, who would mount up and ride into RRS with opinions on everything from cell phones to AAA. And his position on nearly everything was that self research and learning was obsolete. If you needed something, you simply called on your cell phone, and found someone who could provide you with the answers you need. No need cluttering up the brain with useless information. You carried a cell phone and that got you what you need.

Well, he got caught on the freeway with a flat tire, once. And not knowing how to fix it, reached for his cell phone and called for a tow. There was no signal available from where he was located, so he got pissed and tried to walk somewhere for a better signal. After a few hours walk, he finally connected to a tower, placed a call, and called a tow. He walked back to his car to find it had been stripped bare with little left but the paint job and someone working on that. The tow truck had been there, had seen the stripped skeleton, and had left. He had to walk somewhere to get a ride back home. He was pissed, but when he related his experiences, here, and was told he should have learned how to change a tire, he simply said that thinking was obsolete. It's simpler to just call someone.

So, though your point is certainly correct, and makes a lot of sense, you're dealing with some individuals who don't know, don't care, don't want to know, and don't want to care how to do things themselves. It's easier to simply ask, or in Tim's case, demand, that someone do the work for them.

In other words, it's simpler just to ask someone.

There are two sides to every story. Assuming he had full coverage insurance, with a resonable deductable, for less than the cost of a set of 5 high end tires (4 and a new spare), he got a brand new car. :-)

If he did not have enough, or any insurance, that 's because he did not make enough phone calls. :-(

It is good to know if stormy weather a few Counties away from you is moving into your County/your City area.A weather radio which sounds an alert when it is almost too late isn't such a good idea, in my opinion.People who are driving/Airplane Pilots/Ship Pilots need to know what kind of weather to be advised of.

If I was driving from here to New Orleans or Dallas or Little Rock or Memphis or Birmingham or Pensacola, I would want to know what kind of bad weather to look out for.

You may want to take Steve's advice, and check the scanner groups.
there is also a few weather related groups here on usenet.
any way, every thing is made in china, so, the name on the front won't make a bunch of difference. i picked up a new one last fall at the local radio shack. 12-519. it was on sale, and a new model.
it receives as well as any weather/ same radio does. they all are much the same. this model is able to remove the whip and hook up an out side type antenna. something new on this type of receiver.
so, i thought, what the hell. and, next to 2 other same type receivers, it does receive a bit better. has all the bells and such, and a nice blue LCD. so, i gotta tell ya, one radio is just about the same as the others. all will give you an alert, etc. so, maybe you might look around for a sale, or a place that will take a return.
good luck.

Not so. Politicians of opposing viewpoints give you both sides of a situation and are usually both lying.

Conversely, I'm sure I can think of some truths that show their faces on both sides of that proverbial coin.

I agree whole heartedly. My Sony 2010 performed very poorly in the shower. First, the sound went, becoming very muffled. After a few minutes, the radio stopped working entirely. I was surprised to find there were NO drain holes in the bottom of the case.

It's sad when Sony can't make a radio that is at least as dependable as a bar of soap.

The Great Liberty Net died because the greatest Liberty Net proclaimer of all time, Y-Man, quit proclaiming. That's right, SWL-ers, if Y-Man had stayed on the job, The Great Liberty Net would continue to have a bigger audience than Larry King and Glen Beck combined.

When Y-Man proclaimed The Great Liberty Net, jiffy-pop sales went through the roof. Diet Coke, hot cocoa mix, Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer - all the favorite beverages of the listeners, just skyrocketed. Traffic jams at 7-11 were commonplace. There were even fist-fights over who would get the last tin of Jiffy-Pop. Some guy pulled a knife over a 6 pack of PBR at a Safeway in downtown Washington, DC. True stories, just check 'em out on snopes.com.

And now, Y-Man is gone and so are the listeners. When Y-Man proclaimed The Great Liberty Net, there wasn't enough radio waves to go around. If you didn't tune in early, all the radio waves were all absorbed before you got there, and you didn't have a chance to hear W1WCR give the roll call. Let alone all the fine commentary given by the netters.

Come back, Y-Man - give The Great Liberty Net a new lease on life. Your countrymen are depending on you. You need to hurry and get on board in time for the return of WB4AIO.

Hello,

I need a 2 Meter mobile antenna that gives superb reception above quality of transmission. I need really 'good ears' and have used a loaded whip until now but do not want to drill holes to pass the coax on this particular car.

I see some antennas on ebay that are 'through the glass' antennas:

How are these for reception in fairly rugged terrain?

How do they hold up to power washes, i.e. do they adhere well under adverse conditions?

Are any better than others or are they all bad?

Thanks

I probally flew over Arizona when I was on my way to Oakland Army Terminal in early January 1964, I hitched a free ride via Mississippi Air National Guard in Flowood,Mississippi.About a year later from Vietnam via Air Force Jet to San Francisco, on back home (Home Sweet Home) to Jackson on a Delta Jet, I might have flown over Arizona again.Other than that, I have never been to the Great State of Arizona before.

I suggest a 5/8 wavelength (appx 1/2 wavelength long, with a 4 turn 1" dia stainless steel with spring coil at the bottom) on a large (say 6" dia) magmount, Mine certainly works well. It's quick to remove. Use a rubber boot on the magmount, and remember to clean the spot where you place it. It will probably stay in place up to Mach 1 (well, at least 100mph). Just slam the door (carefully) on the coax.

They always eventually fall off. You can get very good antennas with RG-174 which is really easy to tuck under window gaskets. That's what I use for my "no drilling" 2 meter installation.

Thanks.

This is essentially what I am doing with another car, using a 5/8 whip on a loaded base and an SO239... outstanding reception. That said... running the coax out and around is not an option on this vehicle. Neither is drilling holes behind the seat as I did on yet another one.

A couple of notes for your setup:

My first one did get caught in the door when the mother-in-law was not on the ball... coax irreparably cut. The next time I got the skinniest corrugated tube (that is used to bunch harness wires in cars) and put it over the coax along that spot, but it allowed rain to run right down it and into the back seat... it needs a sealer.

Also... these are used daily and seldom removed. I had a 3 inch magnet on the trunk this winter and moisture built up under it then froze. It flew off and dragged a half mile or so before I could pull over... not good. I now have a super strong 5 inch magnet on there (what I was searching for when I last posted here) and it isn't coming off for nuttin :-) In fact... even if I wanted to take it on and off, it is so strong that getting it to come straight up with no scratch or scuff is tough. On that car that's OK to a degree... it would be really bad on this one.

I've never messed with the seal. Does it return to form after the coax has been there a few years and then removed? Can it leak and can it be sealed with silicone or something? How do I know when I am lower than the glass to go through?

Thanks for replying.

I understand that. If someone had a posting history - too me at least - it then validates that it's a serious question. I'm all for asking questions especially with this hobby.

I guess it just kind of rubbed me the wrong way at the time, my apologies to the OP if this was a legitimate question and not just a shot at chit chat. Like I said earlier, at least for me, when there is a posting history - then I don't think anything about it. As always, well said Peter.

Radio Shack presently is closing out the Grundig G5. I bought one new in the box, with an AC adapter and carrying case, for $59 and change at the RS store in Richmond's Southside Plaza about two weeks ago. Managers apparently have a great deal of discretion over pricing, so it's a good idea to call ahead. The G5 is a lot of radio for the money.

A good friend sent this to me and said, "Send it to 20 people you know." You are one of my 20. If the 20 people who received this from my client do what I'm doing, that's 400 messages. If each of the people I'm emailing send 20, that's 8000. Then 160,000. Then 3.2 million.

If you agree, please pass it along..

An idea whose time has come :

For too long we have been too complacent about the workings of Congress. Many citizens had no idea that members of Congress could retire with the same pay after only one term, that they didn't pay into Social Security, that they specifically exempted themselves from many of the laws they have passed (such as being exempt from any fear of prosecution for sexual harassment) while ordinary citizens must live under those laws. The latest is to exempt themselves from the Healthcare Reform that is being considered...in all of its forms. Somehow, that doesn't seem logical. We do not have an elite that is above the law. I truly don't care if they are Democrat, Republican, Independent or whatever. The self-serving must stop. This is a good way to do that. It is an idea whose time has come.Have each person contact a minimum of Twenty people on their Address list, in turn ask each of those to do likewise. In three days, most people in The United States of America will have the message. This is one proposal that really should be passed around.

Proposed 28th Amendment to the United States Constitution

"Congress shall make no law that applies to the citizens of the United States that does not apply equally to the Senators and/or Representatives; and, Congress shall make no law that applies to the Senators and/or Representatives that does not apply equally to the citizens of the United States ."

You are one of my 20.

If you don't have twenty, pass it on to whatever number you can.

I have a real "time capsule" condition Sony ICF-6800W (orange version) SW radio. All lights working and not a scratch on front give or take a couple of very small nicks that are only visible upon very, very, close inspection. Includes power cord. Reception is excellent and I was able to pull in numerous stations with just the rod antenna even though I had the switch set to external. Once I switched it over I was pulling in stations left and right. There are markings on back where the original owner etched his license number. Asking $400 plus postage. Picture is below and also I have included a link to Here's why The Great Liberty Net died ..

The Great Liberty Net died because the greatest Liberty Net proclaimer of all time, Y-Man, quit proclaiming. That's right, SWL-ers, if Y-Man had stayed on the job, The Great Liberty Net would continue to have a bigger audience than Larry King and Glen Beck combined.

When Y-Man proclaimed The Great Liberty Net, jiffy-pop sales went through the roof. Diet Coke, hot cocoa mix, Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer - all the favorite beverages of the listeners, just skyrocketed. Traffic jams at 7-11 were commonplace. There were even fist-fights over who would get the last tin of Jiffy-Pop. Some guy pulled a knife over a 6 pack of PBR at a Safeway in downtown Washington, DC. True stories, just check 'em out on snopes.com.

And now, Y-Man is gone and so are the listeners. When Y-Man proclaimed The Great Liberty Net, there wasn't enough radio waves to go around. If you didn't tune in early, all the radio waves were all absorbed before you got there, and you didn't have a chance to hear W1WCR give the roll call. Let alone all the fine commentary given by the netters.

Come back, Y-Man - give The Great Liberty Net a new lease on life. Your countrymen are depending on you. You need to hurry and get on board in time for the return of WB4AIO.

Spend a bit more and buy the made in Japan Sony ICF-SW7600GR
http://www.amazon.com/Sony-ICF-SW7600GR-Shortwave-Receiver-Reception/dp/B00006IS4X
. It has superior performance and unlike the made in China junk you Get off your high horse, the man asked a legitimate question in the proper newsgroup. All your inane response did was derail the thread into a string of rubbish that only served to increase the noise to signal ratio in the group. Small wonder why so few people post here anymore.

I think the short answer is, He's not a Radio Buff - or else he has too many or needs the money. My big question is, Is the price tag (which somebody will probably pay) for actual performance or just for cachet? It's real pretty, and it's a SONY, but is it as good as other $400 radios?

Gregg is very good at derailing legitimate threads. You should see him in action in other newsgroups where he has teamed with a bunch of trolls who already have the destruction of two newsgroups (that I know of) to their credit. He regards this newsgroup as "home turf" and has asked his troll mates to stay away so he can retain a "clean image" here.

This makes me wonder. My guess is that he/she is not in a position to have a lengthy discussion, let's say they are in Iran, Syria, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Gaza, etc.

He opens a disposible email account, posts his question with as little identifying information as possible, takes the advice and has someone buy him a radio and bring it in hidden in their dirty socks in their luggage.

He then disapears from here, and sits in the dark, listening to the news that is uncensored and unmonitored on shortwave, instead of the internet where it is both censored and monitored in his country.

I know this is awfully melodramatic, but if you think this does not still exist to this day, you must be asleep.

During the cold war it was common, have we all become so jaded that we assume everyone who posts here is a native Englsh speaker, has broadband internet, unlimited funds and time, and lives in a democracy that allows the free flow of information and wants to be identified.

If you saw the last Saturday Night Live, where (an actor playing) President Obama, went over the census form with you, with some very difficult questions, you can extrapolate the one about firearms to radios.

I run RG174 up the front window gasket to the roof. I get it from the dash to the windshield via the void where the front door closes. There

Thanks for this - I have tried Suriname on 4990 a few late nights running now, and so far, just weak carriers on SSB. Have not had good N-S signals now for about a fortnight. In fact, almost everything from SOTB - including Mexico on 6185 - has been sketchy at best. Only Brasilia on 11780 has been knocking through.

Had a really good listen to R. Africa yesterday on 15190, though - sent them a report, see if they respond. They make it easy at their website, enthusiastically inviting form e-mail reports for postal QSLs. They even give an example of how to write one, and it includes almost no detail at all! Mine was considerably better than their example :-)

CVC 1Africa Zambia on 5925 from 0400-0500 is now about the best African on the dial, similar signal to V. Nigeria but far better audio. English too :-)

I think you've hit the real issue. Sony has always made some interesting, if not particularly grand, radios. Performance is good in their class, but there are usually better radios in those classes. What Sony is good at is selling the cachet. Lots of eye appeal, large feature set, decent audio,...some much better than others..., even the Sony name, but in the end you have to look at the class the radio performs in.

You can get much better performance...sensitivity, selectivity, overload immunity, noise floor, or even audio performance...in other radios, for the same money. Not as flashy. Not as recognizable, but solid performers, for the same money you'd spend on the veneer of Sony.

There are those here who've lauded and magnified the name of Grundig to the high peaks of Olympus by their experience with Sat 800. "The Finest Shortwave Radio in the World."

Ahem. Yes, well....

Put them in front of an R75 and, first, they'll question it's lineage. Some who've lauded Grundig have never worked a radio out of the consumer portatop class. They don't have an antenna capable of getting the most out of R75. So, they don't see the intrinsic value of a radio in the R75 class. And for them, R75 has nowhere near the cachet of a Grundig. Or a Sony. So, what they buy is the cachet. And in that mindset, not knowing what better performance in a radio can be, 6800 Orange is a pinnacle receiver. While you, yourself, work your R75, with better results and greater satisfaction, based in a broader understanding of the fundaments of radio.

Or to frame it differently, you define acceptable performance and select a receiver that meets your needs, regardless of the veneer, while they buy a receiver from a brand they know, with the veneer they like, and let the manufacturer define acceptable performance.

Someone will definitely pay the $400 for the radio. But the knowledgeable ones will spend that same money on a better, or higher performance, receiver.

Peter hit it right on the money. it's a nice receiver, fair performer.
it's a classic, and very collectible. i have an "orange", in my collection. i wouldn't want to even try to DX with it. but it is a keeper. if i remember right, Mike, the radio expert, or what ever he calls himself now, had 4 of these. vary nice to look at. some one will snap that up at that price, and show it off at the office, den, whatever. i hope he sells it fast, if i think about it too much,
i'll want it.

Thanks for the input. I finally found WX receiver reviews on the web and decided on the Reecom R-1630. It seems a bit better than the Midland WR300, but the point about all these things being made in China is well taken. So roll the dice and cross fingers.

None at all in my case. I had weather radios when I lived in the US, but they did not have the alerts yet.

That leads to:

http://www.weather.gov/alerts-beta/

The US government provides weather alerts as RSS feeds. RSS feeds for those that don't know are a way of letting your web browser know when a website is updated.

For example, everytime a new topic is posted on a busy discussion list,
I use a program called RSS2Email which sends me an email.

Obviously, the same thing can be done with weather RSS feeds too.

Email is just an example, depending upon how good you are at scrounging programs or services or writing your own, you can have a weather alert sent to your cell phone, your pager, ring a bell in the house etc.

Some RSS gateway programs allow filtering so that only some things are sent to you. In this case a storm warning for two counties west of you would not be of any interesting unless it is moving east.

While a weather radio is small portable and relatively foolproof, and any internet based application is not, it may be a useful thing to add to your information sources.

I found this with a quick web search, it looks like other weather information providers also have RSS alerts.

Geoff.

You could have mine. For the price, I'd rather get an HQ-145, HQ-180

I have some old weather alert radios.I don't use any of them though.
Whenever the weather around here gets stormy I click on WAPT channel 16
tv channel. http://www.WAPT.com
If David Hartman (the tv weather news guy) points to a certain street in the Jackson metro area or anywhere in Mississippi and if he says, Take hello, my name is larry will jr., i'm from maryland as some of you might know. i've been the voice of kracker radio and commander bunny and a few others over the years. IN MY OLD AGE I'VE FOUND THAT THIS HOBBY HAS JADED ME MORE THAT ANYTHING! what started out as fun has really turned me into an angry old man.i never thought a hobby like this could effect someone in such a negitive manner. i've found that the broadcasting has not been fun for the last few years. so after become a very angry person,i've just decided to wash my hands of it all togather.everyone of you who listen to me are a bunch of idiots.you could never appreciate my programming.there was no respect for me or my station.so i'd like to just say fuuk you all,please dont write me anymore.

this is the end,any broadcasts from this point on will only be rebroadcasts by someone else.
i'm done with this sorry azz hobby becuse you've all shown yourselfs to be pieces of crap.
enjoy your pitiful lives and when you think of me you go fuuk yourself

GOODBYE,

-KRACKER

You have a personal debate with me personally, you hide behind your priggish censorship.
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fx-RjYem5ZM

I was & STILL AM a LICENSED AMATEUR OPERATOR 3 years before you were born.

Your DEDICATED SWL is to me admirable....I WAS A SWLER when WE BUILT OUR OWN TUBE TYPE RADIOS, Regen Super Regen, I PASSED the 2nd. & FIRST CLASS RADIOTELEPHONE License the year TUNNEL DIODES were made public, (The FASTEST SWITCHING DIODE EVER!!!)

You are a TROLL, in as much as YOU WILL NEVER ADMIT that ANY IDEA that YOU PERSONALLY DO NOT "Feel Good about" is WORTHY OF PRESENTATION.

I find you a NAZI of the 4th. order. If ALAN WEINER knew of your gross persecution of this eccentric old jew he would said it as well. MY FAMILY HATE NAZIS....My Name JOHN C. BERNAYS, Murray C. Bernays, (BELOW) Was MY GRANDFATHER'S BROTHER....my UNCLE. You disgust me.

The Role of Murray C. Bernays

In July, 1944, with evidence of Nazi atrocities, not only against European Jews but also against Allied prisoners of war, the U.S. Office of the Chief of Staff appointed Lt. Colonel Murray C. Bernays to head up the investigation on Nazi war crimes against U.S. servicemen. Bernays, a naturalized American Jew of Lithuanian origin, and a graduate of Harvard Law School, was practicing law in New York at the time of his appointment. A brilliant lawyer and meticulous investigator, he began the task of collecting information.

Very early in the process, it became evident to Bernays that it would not be enough to try specific individuals for specific offenses. In his view, it would be a travesty of justice to try individual Nazis and leave the Nazi movement out of which they emerged unpunished. Accordingly, Bernays began looking for a philosophical and theoretical rationale for unmasking the bestiality of the Nazi plan and program as well as its implementation through the instrumentality of accused war criminals. According to Robert E. Conot, Justice at Nuremberg, 1983:12, Bernays found the inspiration he needed in Raphael Lemkin's book, Axis Rule in Occupied Europe. Lemkin had argued that organizations like the SS were criminal conspiracies. In that context, the murder of 6 million Jews and nearly 6 million additional civilians by the Nazi government could be viewed as a monstrous conspiracy against humanity -- a conspiracy based upon the doctrine of racial purity.

The second prong of Bernays' approach was the concept of international law which, in his view, represents the conscience of humanity. If, in fact, the Nazi program was a gigantic conspiracy against humanity, carried out in violation of international law, any legal proceedings against Nazi war criminals should be, first and foremost, a trial of the entire Nazi conspiracy. If the Nazi organization is found guilty of atrocities against humanity, that conviction should also extend to any of its members.

Bernays' ideas were presented to President Roosevelt in late November, 1944, in a memorandum from Secretary of War, Henry Stimson, and Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, entitled "The Trial and Punishment of European War Criminals." Major opposition came from Great Britain. The British that war criminals should be executed without trial created something of a stalemate in Washington. One person in the United States who took strong exception to the British reaction was Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, a Roosevelt appointee and close personal friend of the President.

On April 12, 1945, President Roosevelt died and Vice-President Harry Truman moved in to fill the office. Exactly two weeks later, Truman authorized Justice Jackson to proceed with preparations for the trial pending approval from the United Nations.

Jackson began putting together a staff and developing a prosecution plan. His plan called for the creation of an international military tribunal composed of prosecutors from the United States, Great Britain, France and the Soviet Union. British opposition remained strong until it became apparent that the end of the war was near. When Hitler and Himmler and Goebbels committed suicide and Mussolini was executed in Italy, their position shifted significantly. On May 31, 1945, the United Nations War Crimes Commission met in London. General approval was given to the Military Tribunal plan. Churchill appointed Attorney General Maxwell Fyfe as the chief British prosecutor. Andre Gros led the French delegation and Major General I.T. Nikitchenko headed up the Soviet staff.

After some very sharp debate, the Palace of Justice in Nuremberg, Germany was chosen as the site of the trials. On August 8, 1945, in London, the four participating nations signed the Charter of the International Military Tribunal.

In the course of the trial it was Justice Jackson and the other prosecutors who emerged as the principal actors, along with the defendants. Colonel Telford Taylor is generally credited with designing the procedure for gathering evidence and organizing the preparation for the trial. But it was Colonel Murray C. Bernays who first conceived of the trial and identified the fundamental bases upon which it was to be constructed.

Why don't you actually try to create a program ? i would like to hear

Well to stop broadcasting you would have to actually broadcast in the first place.

The only piece of "crap " is you for trying to pull some juvenile

This @$$hat is obviously delusional .

Simply amazing , he wants to be me. I guess it must suck to be him . I guess I must be a pretty righteous dude to have fans like this @$ $clown.

Next time you try to impersonate me try using spell check you are only making yourself appear even more pathetic than you already are.

All in the eyes of the beholder I suppose. I would keep my Hammarlund HQ129X with Heathkit Q Multiplier with the freq. counter over it. Spec wise, I have no idea if it's any better but I trust my Hammarlund over a Sony(most of them) anyday. There are so many techniques with time and patience that I can really clear up and dig out a signal with it, with that particular Sony, I just don't think I could keep a lower noise floor and clean it up as well as with the Hammarlund - especially with the AD DX sloper or my nice loop.

Yep Bruce, I have the 140X - haven't had it aligned recently - I'm sure I'll add a freq to it though. I never used the 145 but I did test drive the 180 for four days. I don't know, even though I have read the reviews and specs it just seemed (at least to me) that I could get more out of the 129X.<shrug> Maybe because I've had years behind her controls. {?}

"so far"?? You may soon have a problem with him. He has just invited his troll friends over here from rec.knives, s.c.t. and rec.scuba.

You'll find your "friend" Gregg is a two faced jerk.

Gregg's not real bright however as he doesn't yet realise that if he hangs around turds, soon he will smell like a turd, an inevitable consequence.

Digital land line phones and cell phones, (digital) you never know when those Commies might be listening in.''They'' can, and ''they'' offten do, make the phone companies turn on land line phones and cell phones so ''they'' can listen to what people are saying, up to about a thirty feet radius of the phones.You might think your phone is turned off, but how do you know for sure? ''They'' can have your phone turned on just as easily as you click on some music on the internet.

I keep my phone UNPLUGGED!, except for when I want to use it.

I have a completely restored HQ-145. Some say it is not the best HQ, and certainly not the equal of the HQ-180, but on AMBCDX, it is superb! As is my restored Lafayette HE-30, another great tube radio.

I've got a BC-794 Super Pro, one of the progenitors of the SP line. Amazing AMBCDX. And with the variable bandwidth IF, before NRSC II, delicious audio. In fact, the audio stage was configured to be used as a phono amplifier when not receiving.

HQ-145 is a bit more modern than my own, but equally representative of the attention to quality that Hammarlund was known for. With that amazing sound.

And it will definitely keep the shack warm at night.

A DirecTV service/repair guy showed up here about an hour ago to fix my DirecTV.(My DirecTV has been ''out for lunch/AWOL'' since last Friday morning around 7:30 AM) What it was, the cable connectors were corroded.He used a special tool and he clipped off the corroded connectors and he installed new connectors, in my carport and he went up on my roof top and he installed new connectors up there too.He said the new connectors are a better quality, he said sometimes they don't tighten the connectors properly and moisture gets in there and corrodes the connectors.How does that relate to Shortwave radio/antennas/cables? You might want to check your connectors once in a while.

To be honest, California is obviously a sitting duck for big quakes - but unless I hear that some reliable scientists are using the data in a statitistically meaningful way to reach the conclusion that our quake risk has heightened, then prounouncements of this type are just for laughs and nothing more.

Likely, the connectors he installed are weathersealed. Most installers are using weathertight connectors, now.

The issue is the cable, itself. If the connectors weren't weather tight, there's moisture in the coax.

End of game.

I really don't get this ass clown. I only post about Krypsy Kream in the knife group. I don't even know what sct is and I have never scuba dived, though I think it may be neat....why would I post in a scuba group?

I have NEVER had anyone follow me around usenet before and it's kinda weird too be quite frank about it. All he does is read this group and as soon as someone shows "any" problem or disagreement in something I said (in this case Preist) - then this ass clown joins into the fray.<shaking my head>

I said I was sorry to the OP, I take it that he accepted my apology because we have since spoke in the same thread and another, everything is fine and THAT is what make the Ass Clown pissed....lol. I almost wished I never asked questions about knives in a knife group and then I wouldn't have this old man following me around like he wants to smooch me or something. As for the Distinguished Troll Society, they are fueled by bullshitters like Krypsie and Kramer- they'll never be a problem over here, hence the "distinguished" monicker. Sorry Bruce.:-(

Don't put to much energy into it. It happens. There's one, who shows up here, from time to time, who's been stalking me for a decade, now. A case of too much time. I've filtered this person in the group. And they know better than to contact in person. After a while it becomes a non-issue.

Chalk it up to USENet, and don't let it impact your enjoyment of the group.

There was no charge on that DirecTV repair.Last Friday morning when I phoned DirecTV, that nice lady said because I am a loyal customer of DirecTV, there will be no charge to me.

Next time though, I reckon there will be a charge.She gave me credit for the days my DirecTV service wasen't working.I can sign up for about six or seven something dollars per month for whatever repairs, if or whenever needed, I don't think that is worth it to me though.

I am looking at my March 2010 snail mail DirecTV statement thingy now,

OK, here's one -

RUSSIA, R. Voice of Russia, 9840 kHz, 4 March 2010, 0500z, TX = Petropavlovsk-Kamchatky. GUM Shopping Mall architecture commemorated on front, handwritten full data on back, with nice personal letter from Elena Osipova, Letters Dept. The QSL itself is an odd shape and size, about 7.75" x 3.5" - won't fit any normal holder I know of. In 40 days from being sent via an unusual free business mail service VoR offers on its website via Nederland, of all places. VoR seems to really want the reports!

For what it's worth, the program I reported on was excellent and memorable, about famous opera singer Irina Arkhipova. With top-notch Russian composers and musicians, VoR's cultural programming is second to none.

Is there a certain measurement of a radio for it too be deemed fit for an Ultra LIte?

Would the Radio Shack DX 399 be in that category, it's pretty small, not as small as some of those little Sonys.

Anyone in here other than John P. that indulges in that specific type of monitoring? I've been thinking about it.

I had the impression that the "size" is more about specs than physical size.

Something with shortwave doesn't really qualify, since it's a better than average receiver.

It's a sub-hobby, not unlike low power transmitters in amateur radio.
Use common broadcast band radios and see what you can do with it. No q-multipliers, no fancy filters, no fancy detectors. What you can receive will not match what you can do with a much fancier receiver, but it resets things. With a simpler receiver, you will have to work hard to receive stations that might be easy with fancier receivers, but it gives you a challenge that might be more difficult with a fancier receiver. Any improvement of the receiver/antenna beyond a certain point will be incremental, so the fancier the equipment the harder it will be to see any improvement.

Most people don't tune up and down the AM band, so they don't realize what they can receive. Broadcast companies want "Coast to Coast" on their stations because then they can sell ads for it, but a listener can hear it up and down the band, without any effort at all.

So they get amazed if they do tune up and down the band one night, "wow, I can hear XXX, that's amazing", just like the way most people enter the hobby of radio listening (or at least did at one point, I don't know if that's changed). The first few nights, it's really easy to accumulate quite a number of stations, which is impressive at the beginning. But then beyond that it takes more effort, if only because you need to wait for conditions to allow a different selection of stations to come through.
Then you need to work harder and then eventually you'll need a better receiver, not so much sensitivity wise but with other specs, so you can better isolate two different stations on adjacent frequencies. But you won't get a dramatic increase in stations with that better receiver, you will simply make it easier to hear stations when they come in.

Ultralight seems to be about resetting all that. Start again, get a simple receiver, and see what you can do with it, stretch that receiver to the limits instead of going for something better.

They are 21st century "negroe flaves"

They do our shit work for below par wages. They pay into Socsec and Medicare but do not collect. We pay for their emergency room care now. If they had regular medical care, the big picture bottom line for everyone will be less.

When we moved to Arizona in 1957, my dad talked about how the goddam wetbacks were taking over the Southwest.

I don't think CalTech has much of a Greek scene. None that I've heard of.

The tool he used looked to me like a Paladin 1545 All-In-One Telco Tool.The new connectors he installed (using that same tool to remove the old connectors and install the new connectors) have a black insert them weather tight.

Thanks! What caught my eye immediately was the Mariinsky Theatre link - the director of the MT Orchestra, Valery Gergiev, brings his band around the US every couple of years, and we always enjoy his concerts. His performances are a bit uneven - they have a typical rough-and-ready Russian sound - but always played passionately and frequently inspired. Last month he gave us a great Tchaikovsky 5th symphony and a Fine Rachmaninoff 3rd concerto, plus Prokofiev ballet suites that were panned by a local critic but which I thought were thrilling.

I think maybe many of us start that way, although I came in the side door - I had a Realictic Astronaut-8 multiband radio, loads of fun and certainly sensitive enough, but all-in-all just a basic single-conversion inexpensive portable radio with an AM (MW) band. Back in rural Massachusetts, and thinking that it was a great rig (I never let reality get in the way of fun :-) I managed to get stations - using just the internal ferrite, mind you - from all of New England, all the Central Atlantic states, all of the Ohio Valley, every Canadian province out to Manitoba except PEI, most of the Mississippi Valley, Texas, Kansas, MO, N&S Dakota, Wyoming, Utah (KSL was easy, like a local) and once managed to snag LA in California.

Herb Jepco's "Nightcap Club" on KSL was sappy, but a nice excuse to call in to a distant radio station. WBZ's Larry Glick all-nighter had a much more interesting twist to it - in terms of sheer interest and tongue-in-cheek fun and silliness, he beat the pants off Art Bell and George Noory :-D

SE Asia is usually pretty decent for us statesiders that time of day, though...it's the only time when I am reasonably assured of hearing the little Indonesians and PNG stations, plus Laos, while the sun is above the horizon. It's the 14 MHz that gets me though - maybe better for you at that time, but still early for us west coasters. In any case, nice work!

I looked forward to listening to the LN for a long time. It was always amusing. The "deliberate jammers" made it great though, over the top!

The Hitler speeches and Nazi music were nice touches too. Vic sounded so natural with the appropriate background music.

Man it seems like yesterday when the gang was all here. Then the best ones died off and along came Riley and cleaned up the frequency. Sad day, indeed.

Sponsored by the late K5ZU - your frequency captain.

Yeah, how dare they clean up the frequency and have people obey the law.

There is a video circulating with Riley giving a talk on the bands, courtesy, interference and how to keep amateur radio civil and viable.

Basic sense. And he's a pretty entertaining guy.

Hello,

My father has the same receiver, but it indicates "soundmaster space commander", bought in the Netherlands many years ago. The Playboy bunny doesn't appear in my father's version.

Thanks,

Did not have that luck this morning. I could hear the DXpedition on Con Co Island, Vietnam. 3W6C. Same time frame. He was about an S7 but he was operating split frequency on 14.205 with transmit frequency 10-20kHz up AND he was going by number worldwide.

The one time he finally got to the 8 call some stupid US hams were fighting on the frequency because someone was not operating split.
Plus, the operator was having a hard time. It was taking him sometimes 7 or 8 tries to get a call right. By the time he came around again the window had closed.

Well, it was fun hearing a station in Vietnam or at least off the coast of Vietnam. Supposedly, there was a secret military base there during the war. QRZ.COM has details if you enter 3W6C.

A 40 meter dipole fed with ladder line at about 25 feet in height to a

It was never the same after the guy, I can't remember his call anymore, who was always ranting about "nests of jews" being somewhere around his area, checked out. He was Italian, that much I remember.

I think he was in NJ. but somehow Philadelphia comes to mind too. He was vicious, and totally out of his mind. Jews everywhere, doing everything. He raved about someone for about 20 minutes, and even after Vic and the boys told him repeatedly the guy wasn't jewish, he raved some more about them. Finally, he moved to another target and someone keyed up over him, and said, "THANK YOU GOD!!", which got a big chuckle out of the rest of them.

One of the "jammers", someone I couldn't hear very well would get him rolling every week. Even Vic got tired of his rants after a while, and would try to get him stopped, and sometimes he and the stronger regulars would just talk right over the top of him. He started unkeying halfway through a rant to catch them doing it, and that would make him go into overdrive. A couple times he got so wound up that a couple of the regulars thought he was going to stroke out.

He was my favorite regular, another was Harvey, I think that's who it was, who would drone on with the most monotonic voice I've heard from anyone who wasn't autistic. Vic and the others would talk over him too.

Anyone tried the CCRadio2 from CCrane? This is no UltraLite but it is supposed to be one of the top performing portables.

Supposedly it has a tuned antenna - From one web site: "The twin coil ferrite is actually tuned to the desired AM frequency via a varactor diode automatically for about seven seconds after frequency is changed."

Made by Sangean. It sounds interesting. One review site: http://www.radiointel.com/review-ccrane_ccr2.htm

It looks like it was made by the same factory that made the National DR-28/Panasonic RF-2800.

Notice the knobs, and the metal bails on both sides they are the same.
Also look at the printed on switch and control labels the type styles are the same.
The Seaker cover is the same type as the Panasonics.
The general design of the plastic case is very similar to the RF-2800/
RF-2900.

No SSB or Sync don't waste your money on this Chinese junk.

I thought it is a Sangean product,Taiwan. CCradio2 is an AM/FM/
Weather bands only. No HF coverage-therefore no Sync or SSB.

Ummm - I have a Sangean radio and it's actually pretty darn good. It has SSB, and it doesn't need sync.

Sangean is pretty good for Chinese junk. They are in Tiawan, not the PRC.

They got into shortwave radios when they bought the rights to the Sony ICF-2001, which they sold as the ATS-803, and the Radio Shack DX-440.

Since then they have made various models, some better, some worse.

> I thought it is a Sangean product,Taiwan. CCradio2 is an AM/FM/

I don't see how you would use them on AM anyway.

I live in Jerusalem, which is a very hi-tech and therefore very electricaly noisy city. The BBC has an AM broadcasting station on 1323 kHz in Cyprus.
I normally can not hear it with anything I have, except for a Drake SPR-4.

Note that I also have a Kenwood R5000 and a TS-430, which has a similar receiver. Both have had the extra BCB attenuation removed which was installed by Kenwood in their US models. It does make a difference, around 10db in either of them, but in the long run, it did not change what I could hear and could not.

When I lived in Philly, I was 3 miles from the KYW 1060AM transmitter, and it was needed to prevent overload. Here there is lots of noise, but no really strong (as in picked up by telephones, etc) signals.

So besides answering the question with a positive, I can answer it with a negative, don't buy a SW, especially ham, receiver and expect it to perform well on the AM BCB.

With that said, what about the GE Superradios? They have their various faults, but they are good AM performers and relatively cheap. If you can find one at a yard sale or thrift shop, so much the better.

I have an SRIII, which is not very useful here due to its inability to pull stations out of the noise. In a less noisy environment, it would perform well, certainly in comparison to its price.

No, it's loaded with broadband noise up until just below 14mHz. Lots of computers, digital devices and DSL internet. EU radiation standards which are a lot looser and easier to cheat.

Who? If you are referring to Gaza, they get most of their power from Israel and neglect to pay for it. In fact the one power plant that is there was just damaged by the locals. It wasn't much of one, it produced less than 1/3 of what they used.

I actually acquired an old one of these recently - a Patrolman CB-9, just fer fun - but I haven't used it for BCBDX yet. Around here, the midst of 50kW flamethrowers, the images are legion up and down the bands. One of these days I'll take 'er out to the sticks and see how she works.

As I recall, the old standard 6 transistor radio was quite adept at BCBDXD. Tons of RF/IF gain, ready access to the IF tuners, and a ferrite bar antenna with killer nulls and lobes. I could hear just about every station in the West at night as I recall.

Heard these guys chanting last night about 0230z pretty well in California on my SX-190 (from AOKI - 14 April update):

7150 R.KUWAIT 0200-0900 1234567 Arabic 100 kW Non-Directional Sulaibiyah

They were about SINPO = 32433; only real obstacle was ham QRM, no surprise there; audio excellent, very modest fluttery fading. If I spoke Arabic, would have been an easy QSL copy.

I mention it because EIBI does not have this on their latest update (12 April) just yet.

If I may ask, why did you move from Philly? I am here in "beautiful" South Florida, and my friend, originally from Philly, would move back in a second, if he had the chance! BTW, I listen a lot to WPHT with my CCrane MW/SW with the twin ferrite antenna and a passive loop. Hooked on Smerconish, Dom Giordano, Gary Rnel, etc. Great talk station!

First, there was a long period when ham equipment wasn't particularly good on AM, since most hams were using SSB. So no wider filters for AM, sometimes there wasn't even an AM detector, and certainly no synchronous detector that everyone seems to think should be mandatory now. I suspect that has changed a bit recently, since some of the techniques used to improve the design allows for adding better AM reception without any real cost, and a lot of the ham manufacturers like to be able to offer lots of bells and whistles, whether or not they are needed.

Another obvious reason is that for a long time any receivers in amateur radio equipment covered only the ham bands. That was a good thing, since you got much better bandspread; if you wanted general coverage you would have started with one of those to begin with. That too has changed, now it's as easy to have a general coverage receiver as it is to have a ham band only receiver, and again it's a selling point.

But, according to some, there may be attenuation that comes into play on the AM broadcast band, or some other limitation as the frequency goes down. Or, RF amplification may be left off, so the receiver can better deal with the strong local signals.

I can't really imagine a manufacturer not using the existing receiver circuitry for the AM broadcast band, since it's just a matter of extending the frequency range. But maybe there are some out there that toss in another IC for the AM band, resulting in no special performance. I remember getting into an argument with a local about whether their shortwave portable receiver would actually be outstanding on the FM band. In that case, whatever great design is used on the shortwave bands is lost, since a whole different circuit is needed for FM, and thus they add a whole other FM receiver, usually an IC, which doesn't have to be anything special; you are paying extra money for the shortwave, not the FM band.

But, maybe the main reason was in the paragraph about the Superradio. That one gets lost of praise, but it really is a pretty generic design. The one thing it does have is a good loopstick antenna, and that's certainly one area where ham equipment lacks. None will have any sort of built in antenna, so one will need something external. That may often be seen as some wire hanging off the antenna jack, and while that works, a directional antenna is pretty useful on the AM broadcast band.

A receiver that has a built in antenna is going to be matched to that small antenna, while a general coverage receiver with no built in antenna may require external circuitry to best use a small antenna.

Hi
I was born and raised and lived in Philly for 49 years. I listened to good but gone WWDB FM 96.5 and enjoyed Irv Homer, Wynn Moore, Frank Ford, Bernie Hermann etc but the old neighborhood is crap. I am listening from up near Scranton and Wilkes-Barre PA. WILK 980 AM tries especially Steve Corbett but they ain't no WWDB.

Ditto on the lack of a good antenna for BCB. As always, I suggest a Wellbrook loop. I've used the ALA100 and home brew loops for NDBs, so BCB isn't an issue.

One of the problems with a radio that requires a PC to do the demod is you can't run 3rd party decoding software on the demod signal since the sound card is busy doing the demod. [Hope that makes sense. ;-)] For example, PC-HFDL requires a sound card, but your sound card is busy with the actual demod. I've got a SDR on loan and it's going back. I find the need for a computer in the field to be a real hassle.

To be fair, it's more like $100 for the OS. I put OEM win7pro on my desktop for a bit over $100 when Fry's had a sale. That all said, I rather have linux. Incidentally PC-HFDL works fine under Wine. I guess it didn't need directx.

It's a bit silly posting details of a web site when it doesn't work.

Mostly to live in a Jewish neighborhood.

Seriously, when I met my (now) wife, after a few weeks of casual dating she said that if I wanted to get serious with her, I had to agree to move to Israel if we got married.

It's a very nice place to live, complete with good socialized medicince, one of the most liberal democracies on the planet, reasonable rent, almost no street crime, etc.

Taxes are high, but no higher than they will be in 2015 in the US.

Philly has some nice things, but lots of street crime, lots of murders, and while there are 8 medical schools within 75 miles, 9 if you count Princenton Plainsboro Teaching Hospital, plus many other hospitals, most of the residents can't afford to use them.

If only. Here we have the standard US brands, Energizer and Duracell which are poorly made in the EU or absolute crap made in Singapore, and Chinese (PRC) brands some of which are slightly better than the Singapore ones others are worse.

Mostly works in Opera 10.10. Linux

I get the normal page, with a set of four boxes in the centre. The two top ones do not have graphics and when I click on them, it claims:

==========
File not found!

The URL you have loaded has not been found on this server.

Please alert the system administrator if you believe you have reached this in error.
==========

so, it would appear to be a fault on their side.

Firefox 3.5.8 Linux shows the same thing, but the background doesn't show any colour.

Both browsers show the numbers. It's the two images that do not appear.

For shortwave, 2.4 which is what most ham rigs deliver is too narrow, 4 is about the best and 6 is better if there is no adjacent channel interference.

BCB AM works best with wider filters, depending upon what's close by.

I don't know how it is elsewhere, here I get a half a dozen or so BCB AM stations, lots of SWBC (mostly on 40m) and the FM band has a station every 100kHz.

Is it really needed for broadcast band AM? I see very little if any fading and can not remember it every being a problem.

I don't think there are any. It's not something the customers want and ones sold in the US generally have extra front end antenuation for the BCB.

That's only for transmit. Very few countries restrict reception of anything

I use a 20 meter long random wire with my r5000 and a 6 meter (high not band) aluminum pole on my ham rigs. My SPR-4 works fine with the pole.

Radio Shack has the G5 on sale for $80.38.
I bought one and campared the AM section to my Grundig YB 305.
Daytime signals only so far, the G5 is much better, signals that fade in and out on the YB are very listenable on the G5.
This may or may not be a fair comparision as the YB has had a fair amount of bumping around.
I thought someone might want to know about the $80 price.

Additional - Started off broadcast with the original (late 60's) interval signal from Czechoslovakia (3 or 4times) then ID as M-A-C.
Then Radio Japan interval signal then jingle version of MAC id twice.
Music in Japanese then continued as above with "Ultra Man".

I went back and checked the recording I made. I was kind of surprised hearing the old Radio Prague int. sig. so had to save and listen again.

Early this morning (0357-0500 GMT) I was listening to NY RADIO CAR-B transmissions on 3455 KHz.

The signal was much weaker than the signals from NY VOLMET on 3485 and NY Radio on various NAT-A and NAT-F 3 MHz frequencies. Even Gander was easier to copy.

Where is the transmitter for NY RADIO on 3455KHz located?

Is this with an A-B comparison, or from memory? The time of year will make a huge difference in even daytime propogation, since in winter, there can still be skip even in midday. This affects daytime reception of distant stations, not so much via interference, but by phase cancellation of the received signal due to dual (or more) path propogation (ground wave vs. sky wave). This is especially true on the high end of the dial.

NY VOLMET is in Barnegat,NJ. They have been testing the 1KW transmission last year. Wonder if the 5KW is not used at this time.
Another site, according to monitoring discussions, may be Riverhead,NY.

R.Kuwait once dominated the shortwave in the ME in signal strength. I think they used to have 250 or 500KW senders. Definetely was wiped out in 1991.

Herb Jepco's "Nightcap Club" on KSL was sappy, but a nice excuse to call in to a distant radio station. WBZ's Larry Glick all-nighter had a much more interesting twist to it - in terms of sheer interest and tongue-in-cheek fun and silliness, he beat the pants off Art Bell and George Noory :-DBruce Jensen

I listened to Larry Glick nightly from Lansing Michigan, I think the time was late 80's early 90's. He was a hoot to listen to.
I enjoyed his calls to pay phones to. Any archives you know of?

Really? Selective fading is a major issue here on mediumwave.

I think even I could build a missile that could home in on a 250 KW signal. Death to the Brown Boveri!

Even in 2005, they were still running 500 kW - their signal was potent every where I heard them. I had no idea they reduced to 100 kW, although if their target is just the ME I'm sure that's adequate.

Yes, here too - ever since I can remember - not only for the nighttime

Not sure about that, worth checking on - I do know he died a year ago or so after having moved to FL awhile back. I think Donna is still around. He was a fun guy. I loved it when he played 'Der Krauwinklers' Landstrom' (His German march) during the 5 AM Farm & Market report with battle sounds blazing away :-) I wish I could find a recording of that piece! He'd also play cool 78's once in awhile, like 'Southie (is my home town)' and 'There's Oceans of Love by the Beautiful Sea (When you're down at Nantasket with Me)'. These can both be heard on the Web. He had tons of kooky guests - one of his favorite topics, being a hypnotist himself, was "astral projection", and boy howdy, did he have some nutty folks on that topic! Fun!

Good site, useful comps, but you still are not showing R. Kuwait on

Hello
Sitting in the back yard away from the house using just the telescopic whip antennas the older Grundig G5 whupped the newer G3 in AM reception. Medium wave AM G5 was more sensitive.
Shortwave too, 15 mhz time signal not audible on G3 was heard faintly on G5.
Anyone else notice this?

My impression is that everyone who knows the G5 feels it is one of the better radios out of China, period. Selectivity, front end and sound quality are apparently quite good too. I'm not big on tiny portables, but I'd sure love to give this one a try.

The Elecraft offers a general coverage option which includes switched filters for the bands between the ham bands. I was thinking more of the upscale classic Ten Tec.

The skywave gets 180 degrees out of phase with the groundwave sometimes.
They can cancel each other out. Usually though, the reflection is asymmetric and only partial cancellation happens. This when you where the flanger effect and the digital sidebands. KFI does it up here too.

Similar reports on eham.net. Some suggest sample to sample variation due to poor quality control on early G3's.

Liberty Net for Week of April 10-17

http://3950.net/2010/04/liberty-net-for-week-of-april-10-17/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

PROPAGATION for this weekï¿½s Liberty Net began well but went very long later in the evening, making some normally big signals fade ï¿½ but N2IRJï¿½s low-noise antenna brought most participantï¿½s signals in with good intelligibility nevertheless. The Liberty Net ï¿½ one of the oldest and certainly the most exciting net in amateur radio ï¿½ is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on (or near, within roughly 10 kHz) 3950 kHz.

Here is just a tiny sample of the highlights from this weekï¿½s edition of the longest-running discussion net in amateur radio:

ï¿½ Was the entire Polish government killed because they werenï¿½t going along with the New World Order boys? (6 minutes)

ï¿½ Obama was soundly booed when he threw baseballï¿½s ceremonial ï¿½first pitchï¿½ this week. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ Is there any danger to Americans from the Russiansï¿½ extensive claims in the Arctic? Some say that Russia better represents our interests than the current regime in Washington. (59 minutes)

ï¿½ Considering his financial crimes alone, should Barney Frank be allowed to retire undisturbed, or be indicted for his actions? (1 hour 3 minutes)

ï¿½ Over 120 Haitians have illegally entered the U.S. through Vermont alone. (1 hour 9 minutes)

ï¿½ With new laws in place, Florida is poised to become the gambling capital of the southeast. (1 hour 11 minutes)

ï¿½ Did you know that Bob Dole is on the board of directors of the Asia Universal Bank in Kyrgyzstan, where a revolution just took place? (1 hour 17 minutes)

ï¿½ Should Goldman Sachs be placed on the terrorist watch list, with all its employees forbidden from being on the U.S. payroll, considering that it has done far more damage to America than al-Qaeda ever could? (2 hours 0 minutes)

ï¿½ Patriots should stop worrying about ï¿½fixing the economyï¿½ ï¿½ in fact, we should strive to crash the world economy right now, since that would destroy the financial parasites while real people who produce real things would survive just fine. (2 hours 6 minutes)

ï¿½ If the percentage of parasites (both predatory financial parasites and the low-IQ underclass parasites) in the population reaches 50 per cent., then Obama and his ilk believe they will be guaranteed re-election in perpetuity. But what happens if the producers simply stop producing? (2 hours 39 minutes)

ï¿½ By fighting these Mideast wars for the worldï¿½s financial elite ï¿½ wars which are actually against American interests ï¿½ and killing hundreds of thousands of innocent people, America is losing its soul. (2 hours 46 minutes)

ï¿½ Will governments soon start allowing citizen-snoops to issue traffic tickets, with a monetary bounty paid for every one that ï¿½sticksï¿½ in court? (2 hours 55 minutes)

ï¿½ Considering his apparent love for financial criminals and Zionist wars, it would be more proper to call Obama a ï¿½corporatistï¿½ rather than a socialist ï¿½ he and his handlers are giving us the very worst aspects of both capitalism and Marxism. (3 hours 10 minutes)

ï¿½ Just as George W. Bush (an Ivy League internationalist) pretended to be a down-home Texas conservative, Barack Obama pretends to be a socialist-leaning ï¿½progressive.ï¿½ (3 hours 13 minutes)

ï¿½ Thereï¿½s a grass-roots movement to write ï¿½IMPEACH OBAMAï¿½ in large black letters on the outside of everyoneï¿½s census return envelopes ï¿½ though a substantial faction prefers to write ï¿½DEPORT BARRY SOETORO.ï¿½ (3 hours 20 minutes)

ï¿½ Is a time coming when bankers will have to hide in attics to protect themselves from an enraged population? (3 hours 40 minutes)

ï¿½ Were the females who brought down Eliot Spitzer and Bill Clinton in sex scandals actually foreign intelligence ï¿½ possibly Mossad ï¿½ agents? (4 hours 1 minute)

Same here. Plenty of G6's in stock for 100 bucks.

The new radio is called the G6 and they can't remember the G5?
Sounds like typical management material.

Rubbish. The Perseus (and other SDRs like SDR-IQ, SDR-14 and the QS1R) will run with any of todays (and yesterdays) computers. If you have a reasonably new PC (or laptop), you will have no problems. In fact, the SDR-IQ will run with a pretty lame PC. I've had various SDRs for almost four years.

Of course, if the reference is the Win98 PC bought in 1999, it's a different matter.

It's a matter of being able to use a low IF, and therefore a roofing filter.

Well,
For years (like 150 or so) Illinois officials have considered themselves above the law.
The worst criminals in the country are so-called public officials in Illinois; From the Mayor of Chicago (who actually runs the state) down.
I was born in Illinois and moved away in 1966. Eventually, I ended up in California. WHAT A DIFFERENCE! The policed in Ca. actually act like public servants instead if Nazis.

If you want to muck up a TRS systemm all a terrorists needs to do is key up on the input transmit frequencies and the fail safe frequencies and Yeah John, thanks - I am a member of that group (dxer.ca). I was wondering if anyone in here was into this particular aspect of the hobby. I think I'm going to get one of the two little Sonys off Amazon. Which one do you have? I thought I remembered you saying you had one of those tiny radios.

Heh, there are some Mississippi idiots too, but I am not one of them.

Last year, that B HO ButtKisser who lives across the street from doggy's couch, he said he is an country boy from Edwards, he said he knows all about chainsaws.Guess what? He BROKE my chain saw!

Last year, that B HO ButtKisser couldn't find the oil drain plug on the bottom of his lawn mower.Guess what? He pushed his lawn mower over here, he rattled my screen door on the front of my house, he said, Show me where that drain plug is!

Do you have a lawn mowere? Do you know where the oil drain plug on the bottom of your lawn mower is?

Last year, when I had to build those two fences in my yard to keep those B HO ButtKissers from driving across my yard and parking their cars on my yard, that B HO ButtKisser came over here, he put his mitts on my fence, he started shaking my fence, he said, First wind that comes along is going to blow that fence down!

About a year ago, when I was using my comealong to put my 1914 Ford Model T car on my trailer, that B HO ButtKisser across the street, he was over here, he said, That wheel is going to drop in that hole! Guess what, I was already keeping a close eye on my old T Model Ford car wheels, I knew I was going to put a couple of bricks at that corner of the ramps so my car could not drop in that hole.

If y'all ask me, I Say that B HO ButtKisser who lives across the street from me is the Dumbest Son Of A Bitch in the World!!!

Most RS managers know nothing about shortwave. That said, there are some G5's still on closeout at scattered locations. I bought a new in the box set with AC adapter and owner's manual for $59 and change at the Southside Plaza RS store in Richmond a few weeks ago. It's a great radio for that price. Ask the manager of your local RS store to do a nationwide search for the G5. At one time, Radio Shack would ship any item to nearby store free of charge.

Ah yes Bob, the ole' silly book. The number one best selling book of all time and here is the kicker.....the most stolen book from both libraries and bookstores and I guess in your case - motels.:-D

Some Cuh, like the irony of stealing it, somewhat of a turn on I guess in a weird way. Kinda the double turn on, ripping off one from someone that would give it to you for free. The best selling and most stolen, go figure. Ha! That silly ole' book.

Yeah I think it was the G3 I checked out at RS, I posted about it in here. I definitely don't want to rag on anyone that has it because maybe (like was said) the quality control varied from set to set. But all I know is that I checked one out at their store close to quitting time and the guy/gal allowed me to clip on my already made maybe 20ft. of wire.

Granted it was the shelf unit, but it was at the very top shelf at the back of the store....so my guess is that there weren't many people that actually reached up that high and pulled it down, may be wrong though. Make a long story short, that particular set was laughable. The dials wobbled, it felt almost like a childs radio and I was in one of those moods that I was going to buy that radio come hell or high water when I walked in that store. I am sure it had to be a bad piece because one would basically IMO have to be somewhat of a beginner to buy the one I had in my hands. No doubt, the G5 HAS TOO be better, both feel wise/switches-knobs wise/ more selective....everything. If I happen to drive by there and have the time I definitely want to check out the G5 though it would really serve no purpose for me except in having another radio.

You can always tell how slippery and slimy the bureaucrats are by the laws and ordinances they inflict on their citizens. When the bad guys know how to do bad things, they make laws to prevent those to whom they do bad things from doing the same bad things. Dad wants you to stay away from his daughter because he remembers how he was when he was that age...

Illinois is a classic case. Daly 1, Daly 2, Ryan, the other Irishman O'Bama, Rostenkowski, Blago...the list is endless. I couldn't wait to move out of Illinois because of their oppression and sleazy politicians.

Maybe these creeps are corrupt from breathing all the toxic fertilizer on their farmlands.

I haven't tried. My widest IF is 2.7 KHz. I don't have the general coverage option. I have a tuned multiband amateur antenna connected to
it. I use a Drake SW2 for my BCB DXing.

The Elecraft has a first IF of 8.2 MHz. Then there's a xtal filter, then the second IF of 15 KHz, which directly feeds the DSP demodulator.

Lucky! MW overseas reception is pretty rough hereabouts in SF Bay Area, CA - too many blowtorches in a 3-mile radius.

Some people seem to have the idea that the legislature is free to make whatever rules that the majority of them agree upon. That's the idea -- called "democracy" -- they usually teach in public schools. But it's a crazy idea, and it is quite the opposite of what the authors of the Constitution had in mind.

If someone causes a physically harmless low-level radio signal to enter my property, or impinge upon my body, that signal is mine to do with as I choose. I can rectify it and use it to operate a battery charger. I can demodulate it if I have the intelligence and the equipment to do so. I can record it. I can totally ignore it. The one thing I may not do is purposefully interfere with it and deny the sender and any possible listeners the right to communicate.

But it's mine. It's been given to me in the same sense that people having a clearly audible discussion on my sidewalk have voluntarily given me their sound waves.

If the senders of the signal do not want me to receive what they are sending, they can easily use any number of essentially uncrackable encryption methods that are freely available -- or they can simply keep their signal off my property.

I think it takes an authoritarian personality to see it any other way.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

This is a relatively new and previously UNAMERICAN concept. It wasn't until the sleazy national cell phone industry bought off the gov't that they made it so. The cell phone industry initially had a tough "sell" on the public because, at first, the public became concerned about privacy. So what did they do? Bought off the right politicians and RTHE FIRST TIME IN AMERICAN HISTORY IT BECAME ILLEGAL TO....LISTEN...TO RADIO. That, my dear friend, is how the private cell phone industry MANDATED a phony "privacy" that they could lie to customers and say existed.

What jaggoffs.

I hope they do legislate that cell phones have to have cancer warnings. It would serve these self-serving creeps right.

I agree, in much the same way that, if a tree's branches grow over

I notice eton (Grundig) is a primary advertiser. It would be helpful to publish a shortwave schedule if you were selling shortwave radios...

Also looks similar to www.dxing.info
They have some of the same advertisers and at least they list some site information. Could be related.

Just to correct an error in the article that keeps getting picked up by the press, this ban does not affect developers. Some idiot who smuggled one in says it will because he is a developer and he wants to justify his smuggling it in.

In reality, anyone developing software for a non-approved hardware platform can get a small quantity of them in for development. You have to fill out some paperwork and pay fees (around $100) for the shipper to get you a permit and pass it around to the appropriate agencies.

All of the big courier agencies (FEDEX, UPS, DHL, etc) know exactly what to do.

Been there, done that.

Geoff.

..... THE GREAT LIBERTY NET!

Yes ladies and gentlemen, tonight is the night to experience the GREATEST NET IN THE HISTORY OF AMATEUR RADIO .... THE ONE AND ONLY LIBERTY NET! Look for it at 22:00 Eastern (02:00 UT) on or around 3950 khz (usually somewhere between 3950 and 3980). Hear the best political and social commentary available this side of the asteroid belt! Hear the truth about the filthy Marxist Mafia currently running Washington DC! You may even hear jammers trying in vain to stop the Net. So turn off that stupid TV or computer ... put away those porn mags ... bring some popcorn, peanuts, potato chips, and beer ... warm up the old Hammarlund ... and tune in to the GREAT LIBERTY NET.

Just think, you'll be able to tell your grandkids that YOU WERE THERE when freedom of speech reigned supreme on 75 meters!

What you call "Marxist Mafia" is the duly elected and sworn-in

About a week ago, a few minutes after he started using his pawn shop lawn mower that his son picked out for him last Summer, it quit running.He started fooling around with it, he still couldn't get it running again.

I hollered out to him,,, Change the oil drain plug and it will run.
He hollered out to me,,, Don't worry about this lawn mower!

A simple little Briggs & Stratton engine, I know I could get it running.I have two old lawn mowers.I do my own repairs and maintnance on my lawn mowers, my old vans and my old 1948 Willys Jeep and my old 1914 Ford Model T car and my old 1976 made in Germany Hercules moped too.I have been doing my own repairs and maintance on my own old vehicles ever since my first motor vehicle wayyyyyyyy back in 1957.

Nonsense. According to Abraham Lincoln (April 4, 1861):

"This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it.
Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember it or overthrow it."

Who is "they"? You mean Omaumau's Marxist Mafia that has taken over what used to be our government?

By the way, just to set the record straight, I am NOT a Liberty Net participant, just a listener. So my comments are my own.

IT'S ALMOST TIME FOR ..... THE GREAT LIBERTY NET!

Yes ladies and gentlemen, tonight is the night to experience the GREATEST NET IN THE HISTORY OF AMATEUR RADIO .... THE ONE AND ONLY LIBERTY NET! Look for it at 22:00 Eastern (02:00 UT) on or around 3950 khz (usually somewhere between 3950 and 3980). Hear the best political and social commentary available this side of the asteroid belt! Hear the truth about the filthy Marxist Mafia currently running Washington DC! You may even hear jammers trying in vain to stop the Net. So turn off that stupid TV or computer ... put away those porn mags ... bring some popcorn, peanuts, potato chips, and beer ... warm up the old Hammarlund ... and tune in to the GREAT LIBERTY NET.

Just think, you'll be able to tell your grandkids that YOU WERE THERE when freedom of speech reigned supreme on 75 meters!

SO BE THERE ..... OR BE SQUARE

I don't see anything even slightly treasonable in what Y-man said.

I do see many things treasonable in what the Washington regime is doing, including torture, illegal wars, killing of civilians without trial or even the pretense of legality (as in "CIA Kill Teams"), et cetera, ad infinitum.

Both Jefferson and the good Roosevelt stated explicitly that it is our duty to oppose such things.

For some reason the word freaking followed by the word Bible just seems a tad too much. I say that half serious and half being funny.

Myself - I have never been a Bible collector. I do know two people that have an extraordinary collection though. I don't understand the thinking behind it but I'm sure many don't understand collecting radios or stamps either. I found out some years back the first Bible my parents gave to me (other than those little ones that fit in your hand when you're little) - - I had wondered why the gold lettering on the outside ie;front cover and binding had worn off.

Other than that, the book itself looks somewhat new though it's around thirty two years old. An oldtimer in his early eighties saw my Bible and told me that it was brown morrocan leather and that there was no known lettering on the outside of a Bible that would outlast that particular leather. I found that pretty cool, at least it doesn't telegraph that it's a Bible and I don't have to worry about Bob stealing it. ;-P FWIW it's the 1611 KJV

Other than that, the book itself looks somewhat new though it's around thirty two years old. An oldtimer in his early eighties saw my Bible and told me that it was brown morrocan leather and that there was no known lettering on the outside of a Bible that would outlast that particular leather. I found that pretty cool, at least it doesn't telegraph that it's a Bible and I don't have to worry about Bob

Is that one of the pocket New Testaments? I had one for a long time that was even a red letter edition. The only one I have now is a combo KJV/Reina Valera.

Now that would be pretty upsetting, I've never owned one that had my name on it - that would be pretty cool.
FWIW I have two of them (not counting my tiny one) - the one with the morrocan leather that is a normal size Bible and I have a big study edition with of course bigger lettering and plenty of notes and such that really help at times in making sense of particular verses/chapter/books.

Here is kind of the sad part. At my age, I have never physically opened up my own wallet and paid for my own Bible.

Exactly BA. :-) I thought I had lost that little thing a longgg time ago, well I did....lol.
My Mom found it in a box stored away and gave it back to me, talk about flooding ones mind with memories. My folks signed it on the inside "To Our Little Boy." Ha!

It was given to me on my sixth birthday. Seeing where I printed my name and my Sunday school teacher's name and the room number kind of choked me up a little bit...lol....still has where I colored on the back blank pages in different crayons - Ha! You had the red lettering huh? No, mine didn't have the red lettering, you mean where the red denoted that Christ was talking? I don't know what Reina is/means.
{?} FWIW mine was a little blue hard cover...I guess the makers and my folks knew a child would destroy a leather or paper copy.

Just too add BA, I missed seeing the word Valera after Reina. I'm still not familiar with it.

Means Queen Valera in Spanish. Basically, it's Spanish version, translated around the same time as the King James version in English.

Mine has the King James and Reina Valera versions side by side on the same page (i.e. John 3:16/Juan 3:16)

Isn't that something, pretty cool. Here is a good saying I was told in my teen years about the Bible. I was told "Gregg - that book will keep you from your sins OR your sins will keep you from that book." Truer words were never spoken IMO. Me personally, it is the hardest book for me to open amongst my mini library here - but once I do....I'm glad I did. That's how I know there is "something different" about that book then any other book I own. Now back to my radio daggumit.:-)

The ole' Tiny-tenna. I have to admit, I was a newbie and got suckered in by Lauterbach....I think that was his name and company. I did purchase the yo-yo antenna, that was an OK piece, at least it worked as presented. I wonder if he is still in business?

That was a good post, made me feel like shouting "LIBERTY NET"!!! Too bad I missed the show though, but I was doing my part by bringing a newbie into the hobby slowly along last night.....I think we have a keeper to the shortwave community. Now if I can get him to buy his own radio instead of using one of mine.

Good response with the Lincoln quote. Unfortunately though, what Abe said back then 'should' pertain to our time also - but this country is too far gone IMO. If there was 'literally' to be a revolt, I mean a REAL revolt or revolution....it would give the real leaders that are calling the shots to unleash the most catastrophic bloodshed the USA has ever seen. What would be key IMO is what would happen "after" that. If it embolded people even more it could be interesting. Definitely exciting times we are living in because things are definitely coming to a head. I just hope for the best.

Brenda -- They're the same regime. I wasn't making a distinction between Manager A and Manager B.

In fact, it was under Manager A's imprimatur that Michael Chertoff's creation, the "JTTF," falsely charged me, and imprisoned me in a filthy cage less than five feet wide, and separated me from my loved ones for almost two years, placing my life in direct jeopardy on several occasions.

But there is truth in what an acquaintance told me recently. His friend John entered what might be described as a "yuppie bar" on the night of Fetchit's election. Women were in tears; people hugged one another and stared dewy-eyed at the idiot box in real transports of joy at all their media- and school-programmed "dreams come true." John pointed at the noble visage of the victor on the screen and said:

"Meet the new boss, same as the old boss."

Once they let a few more of those IBOC HD stations operate at night, the whole AM band will be wiped out. 31 kHz for bandwidth is ridiculous.

I own a few old Bibles.One of them, my mom and dad gave to me when I was a kid.

The largest Bible Bookbinding Plant in the Nation is the Norris Bookbinding Company in Greenwood,Mississippi.

Dr.Charles Bryant, former President of Chamberlin Hunt Academy in Port Gibson,Mississippi, as an amateur Archaelogist in the late 1960's, discovered the lost Biblical town of Trogylium on the Eastern shore of the island of Samos in the Aegean Sea near the Southern coastline of Turkey.This town which appeared for so long to be lost was deleted from the newer Bible translations but still can be found in the King James Version of the Bible where it was visited by the Apostle Paul in Acts 20:15

During the period 1824 - 1847 Joeseph Holt Ingraham, of Natchez,Mississippi, wrote and published 80 novels - approximately 10 percent of all novels published in the U.S. during that period.Included in this literary feat was the first successful Biblical novel ever published, PRINCE OF THE HOUSE OF DAVID.

freedom and religion can coexist, humor must be involved. Rigidity invites power trips. Jesus is not about power trips.

Treason, generally stated, is a crime that places the nation (including the duly and legally elected representatives thereof) at risk. A revolution against a legal government is no different than the treason conducted against the British Crown 235 years ago, Whether it is ethical or not is up for debate, perhaps - but I would not consider revolution against any government elected by the people, no matter how stupid or evil. It is for elections to remove the government by legal Constitutional means. That's why we have them. Any other way is unconstitutional and unpatriotic.

If you disagree, I am sorry. David's quote from another source above explains it well.

That's really really crazy talk. There will be no revolution.

"For the Founders, the purpose of government was to protect the equal natural rights of all. They understood these rights to be antecedent to the creation of political society and government. The just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed who possess the equal natural rights that republican government is supposed to protect. While the people never relinquish their right to revolution, in practice, this natural right is replaced by free elections, the outcome of which are determined by majority rule.

When the States ratified the Constitution of 1787, they pledged that they would accept the results of elections conducted according to its rules. In violation of this pledge, the Southern States seceded because they did not like the outcome of the election of 1860. Thus secession is the interruption of the constitutional operation of republican government, substituting the rule of the minority for that of the majority.

In his July 4 address to Congress, Lincoln observed that the American "experiment" in popular government had passed two of three tests ï¿½ the successful establishing and the successful administering of it. One test remained. Could popular government in America maintain itself against a "formidable internal attempt to overthrow it." It had yet to be proved, said Lincoln, that ballots were "the rightful and peaceful successors to bullets" and that "when ballots have fairly and constitutionally decided, there can be no successful appeal back to bullets."

As William Freehling has argued, the supposed right to break up the government when the minority does not get its way is really nothing but blackmail. The attempted dissolution of the Union in 1860 and 1861 was the final act in a drama that had been under way since the 1830s, only this time the blackmailers' bluff was called."

Yes, but you have to admit that the new boss is a particularly despicable steaming, stinking, pile of excrement.

IMHO this country is headed for disaster. Thanks to this form of insanity called racial/cultural diversity that our nation suffers from, there's no way you can keep the lid on such a volatile witch's brew of mutually-hostile, incompatible races and cultures forever. Put the WRONG INGREDIENTS into the melting pot and .... KABOOM!

I have one (Eton G5). Essentially, I agree with those comments. LW insensitive, and suffers from MW interference. MW is OK. SW not bad from (say) 4 to 20MHz (not good at all 1.6 to 3MHz, where whip switches in).
FM seems very good (don't have really local stations, so haven't noticed overload). Where insensitive, external antenna helps, but overloads easily.

So, Ian - the whip is not the antenna for 1.6 to 3 MHz? If so, I assume it relies on the internal ferrite, which would typically be inadequate...I have an older single-conversion superhet analog radio where the ferrite works all the way to 6 MHz - to increase sensitivity, I place a single wrap of normal wire around the radio, connected to my external antennae. That brings up the signals a lot. More than one wrap of wire and I get images galore...so my experience matches yours closely.

I think the lesson here is that:

(1) It's hard to get good reception on a portable on the 1.6-3/4 MHz band; and

(2) you need a rock solid front end to be able to use an antenna for 1.6 to 3/4 MHz and NOT get spurious junk, unless you are far away from major MW transmitters.

Dave, if someone doe snot want a different colored neighbor - no matter whether the reason is real or imagined - then the races are incompatible. Fear and loathing is a more powerful force in most people than understanding and compassion.

Yes. It uses the ferrite rod up to 2.999MHz. At 3MHz, you can hear the noise increase, but the sensitivity is poor up to at least 4MHz. The external antenna connection (via 3.5mm audio jack) seems to work on all frequencies. There is a 10dB attenuate to help with overload (a tuneable passive preselector would help a lot).

I forgot to mention that it's full of self-generated internal beats (nothing to do with the incoming signals). A few of them paralysingly strong, especially when you're using the whip.

All-in-all, it's not too bad a little portable radio, but it certainly is not a serious communications receiver.

We wish to thank Y-Man for his magnificent proclamation of last night's Great Liberty Net. After years of declining listenership, last night's net showed a sharp increase in the size of the audience. Preliminary polling indicates listeners numbering over 30 million.

This will probably be the biggest event in ham radio since DX302MAN awarded the Jammer of the Year (JOTY) awards in the late 1990s.

As a result of this increase, there is a renewed optimism concerning the future of ham radio.

WHY? I don't know - usually RB is weak with poor audio, never a good sound here in California. Today, the audio is still too bassy, but at least I can understand what they're saying. Maybe it's the Bulgarian dawn grayline? Naw, too early. Whatever - I am pleased. Nice signal.

Signals were good from Europe this afternoon. I was picking up the DRM broadcast from Radio Romania on 9765 from 2030-2100UT. Hi-fidelity except for the intermittent dropouts. Lost about 10%.

The other 31m broadcast (9690) beamed to Europe was strong with slight fading and was 100% readable. Not hi-fi but would rather not miss 10%.

When I was in Tokyo, I wanted to go visit that famous Temple thingy, I forget what the name of it is.
I was walking across a little bridge/pedestrian walk way thingy.There was a Japanese guy who was wearing brown work clothes, he was carrying a brown paper bag, his lunch, I suppose.I asked him how to get to that Temple? He put a mean looking look on his face, he set his paper bag down.I don't know if he thought about wanting to fight me, or whatever.I wasen't interested in starting an International incident.I didn't say anything else, I walked on by him.I still didn't find that Temple thingy.

Doggy just now took me out in the front yard.She ran to the front of my yard and took a poop.Then we walked around in the yard for a few minutes.That old country boy from Edwards, his wife was sitting on the front porch over there.I told doggy, Now go pee, dog.She took a pee and I clapped my hands.

I can empathize. But was it just flames? Or were there other odd

You know, the events were almost simultaneous. The radio was working OK one minute, then the next minute the speaker began to warble, and very soon the sparks flew and puff of smoke emerged. I am certain that the two were related, although at the time I had no idea how to reverse the problem. The latter event did not last long - maybe just a few seconds. It was a heartbreaking moment.

That radio looked a lot like this one, but a slightly different shape,

I Like those old radios that make that kind of noise.I never had one that blew up the speaker or went up in flames though.

Department of Injustice wants to read everybodys emails, without first getting a warrant.They (''They'') would find my emails extremely Boring! I read about that Thames River flood barrier/gates when it was first being built, I read about it in a Popular Science magazine many years ago.Last night I emailed that married Irish woman wayyyyyy over yonder across the big pond, in Bognor Regis,England, about that flood barrier.I told her why they had to build that flood barrier.It is because the Southern part of Limeyland is tilting downward while the Northern part is rising upward.That Thames water is getting deeper every year.

She said as long as she doesn't tilt into the Ocean she doesn't care.

You really should have said "You don't get colonoscopy at the Doctors'?".

That would have assured no confusion on anyone's part about his possible

Not likely. Most of the so called 'Western' powers with older radar setups had to by spare tubes from Russia. As far as I know, tube production is still going well there.

There may be a lesson to be learned from that.

No Dave, it wasn't crazy talk. Everything I hear on the radio, be it AM or apparently the Liberty Net also....along with stories on the net/newspaper - all keep talking about a revolt/revolution. I don't know if many know what that truly entails, but if by my definition that goes down - it won't be pretty. I can see it in the making already,

But yeah, I pray nothing huge like that ever goes down in this

No, I don't disagree with that Bruce. That would be the nice definition of revolt or revolution. I'm all for it I guess, I don't know...I really don't think by your definition that it will make any difference. Call me pessimistic, but I really do believe that if we the people could "really" make changes by voting people out - that the gubiment would outlaw it - I really do.

Do you know what or understand what racial/cultural diversity is Gregg?
Your nation and mine are both built on racial AND cultural diversity.
It's hardly a "volatile witch's brew of mutually hostile, incompatible races and cultures". That diversity is the essence of what the "United States" is all about. Your statements are based on your ignorance, hence fear, of the unknown. You don't understand diversity therefore you are afraid of it. My suggestion to you is to grow up and be a man!
Best you stick to the topic of radio and post responses to discussions such as this on newsgroups where your ignorance will be appreciated.

Think about this for a moment...

This election cycle, you have a great many people who claim that "the country is being changed in the wrong direction", as a result of the vote.
Ergo, either change WAS made by the vote, or those masses of people are all delusional... (my personal vote is a little of each.)

I have to say, NO ONE IMO sang gospel songs like Elvis. Such emotion,

I think you know me well enough to know I don't tippy toe. I just "try" to be nice and civil. I will somewhat disagree with you though on the "Jesus is not about power trips." I know (I think) what you are getting at and there is some validity to what you said, but make no mistake about it Dave, when he comes back (and he will) - he is going to be on the biggest "Power Trip" this universe has ever known and it won't be pleasant for some. At least if that silly book that was written under divine inspiration by the Lord himself is correct.
Yeppers - I think "Power Trip" just about hits it on the head.

The range of 'permissible' options that we are allowed to choose from is limited by the oligarchs behind the scenes. When someone (of any party) goes beyond the 'permissible' bounds his electoral opponents suddenly receive massive funding -- or he is utterly destroyed by the media or the legal system (Traficant, Duke, and many others).

I would say that American elections are every bit as genuine as WWE wrestling tournaments.

Yeah, unfortunately you won't get many to believe in that thinking. It took me a little before I caught on, I mean - who really wants to believe that? I know I don't. As long as "they" can keep the majority into believing that they actually have a say, then it is "all good"
and everything will keep moving forward as planned.

Another Couch revolution, I'm sure. Overweight people won't ever make a true revolution. They're to occupied stuffing their face with burgers and trolling in front of their PC's. Obese people will die from diabetes and hearth-attack before they're able to rise from their couches.

My latest DXpedition in South Africa can be seen at:

Although mainly MW BCB DXing, there is some HF utilities DX as well.

Running the Perseus SDR .wav recordings afterwards is sure a new way of DXing. Getting those logs later in your home QTH is just as thrilling as in the field. Certainly a new way to DX and gets lots of extra catches you would otherwise not have got.

Well, Gregg, I have a question, then.

After we have a bloody revolution where the legally elected leaders by a majority of the people are ousted or killed, and where the US Constitution has been trampled upon and murdered by a minority of whiners and complainers (who were POed that someone else besides themselves had a voice in government) who did not have the patience to do things the legal way...

What would you propose to replace it? You don't want a King or dictator, because he'd be a bad guy and look after his own interests only. You don't want elected officials, because they answer to more people than just those who you favor. A Constitution is obviously no good, because it allows things that you don't want to happen.
What else is left? Fiefdoms? Tribes? Anarchy and lawlessness?
What's your preference? You have a choice - midievel or stone age - because that's about what you'll have left to choose from.

No organized form of government that wil come afterward is ever going to suit anybody who seeks something beyond the year 1200.

When all you have are two competing parties, that's how it will always come out to be. Whoever wins the popularity contest at that moment, wins the election. Until someone comes up with a viable and attractive third party and who does not look like an extremist kook, it will be ever thus.

Well, not exactly -

More like, if you hear a ham and cannot communicate back with him via RF, or hear a nice little SW station in the Amazon who you think might like a personal touch when he hears from you - and you could present your confirmation of hearing his signal using a colorful little card. I know these things are printed and made available to SWLs; I just have no idea whether anybody actually uses them or how successful they are.

If I was a ham, you can bet I'd have a mess of QSLs to share with contacts - but I don't think these ever caught on with SWLs the same way. Just checking to see if I am wrong... :-)

Bruce, I totally hear you. Just so we're on the some page, I wouldn't EVER want that scenario to ever play out. By you doing the you - I take it that you think I want that to happen. Never in a million years would I ever want to see anyone murdered, especially anyone in our government. Like you painted very well - what then- fiefdoms (haven't heard that in years) Tribes /Anarchy etc. etc.

Now if the leaders were actually ousted in a VERY transparent "election" with the media (ha ha) following every step of the way to make sure that it was on the up and up - see where I'm going? It isn't ever going to happen. All I'm saying Bruce is that IMO this all has been allowed too go to far and we are now in a very bad way as a country. I really believe that the plan was implemented decades and decades ago by the powers that be and no one had the nuts enough to stop the boulder from running down hill. Back when JFK was president, and he had his faults also no doubt, but I really feel that when he was eliminated and later his brother - that was the end of any chance to undo some of the bad that was starting to run rampant.

Say EVERYONE that is in any office in Washington (for sake of discussion) was ousted and replaced by ordinary people - like say Joe the Plumber / Harvey the Farmer/ Fred the Truck Driver etc. etc. I am sure they would all go in with the best of intentions but eventually the bad side of human behavior would rear its ugly head and once they had just a taste by the lobbyist....it would be the same thing all over again. I think most of us can agree with the fact that once someone is elected and gets "comfortable" in D.C they become either very dirty or somewhat dirty - and if you're dirty .... you're dirty.

Hey, I hope everything gets straightened out in this country. I don't care if our president is a democrat or republican or whatever, I don't care if he's black or white either. I don't believe in all the democrat/republican slant/discussion that goes on everyday in every media outlet - IMO it is all a facade. I don't know what you think of Jesse Ventura, I never had an opinion on him one way or the other - except when he was a wrestler. But he said something that somewhat confirmed what I had thought all along after he got out of politics. I can't quote word for word but it was something like "If you think there are really democrats and republicans you are fooling yourself. It is all an act, hollywood at its best. They are all friends, it is a big show - they all have drinks and dinners and parties and retreats with each other and laugh about it." He said much more along those lines but I just can't remember all of it.

What's the answer? I don't think there is an answer Bruce, not one that is realistic anyway. That's why I've always said that all one can do is prepare himself or his family as best he can and hope everything turns out OK. I'm sorry if I gave you the idea that I was all for Ramboing the elected officials, number one that would be against the law and number two - it would just make it worse. I applaud you for your optimistic views, at times I start to feel that way like I used to and then - at least for me- I watch them on tv going back and forth and can't help but roll my eyes, it just seems so phoney, just like Ventura said. Hopefully you understand my take now.

Sorry about the reference to "you" - I meant it generically rather than specifically.

So - what about the most recent election(s) do you feel has not been transparent? Or at least, questionable? I have some giant concerns with what happened in 2000, but that's water under the bridge. The most recent election was covere to the umnpteenth degree by every news org on the planet, both liberal, conservative and down-the-middle, and it worked exactly as the Constitution prescribed.

I cannot think of a way that the election in 2008 could have been more transparent. I think you may be seeing problems where there weren't any.

I also think there is a very sour grapes minority opinion by people who sole-source their news and are very confused as a result; they think they are not getting vanilla ice cream with their tripledecadent-cake, and are starting to act threatening and subservise as a result.

Kind of vague - what "bad" do you see then and now that had not happened before? This sounds like conspiracy theory no. 8,944.

Like I said - it's pretty tough to find a better way. BTW, when experienced people find ways to seriously screw things up, can you imagine the chaos that would rein if we had 535 newby Joe-the-Plumbers in Congress? God forbid.

Yeah no doubt - but there is also a considerable gulf between their ideas of public policy.

Actually, I am not optimistic. I think humankind, and a sizable chunk of the rest of creation, is headed for disaster at human hands. At the very least, the US is headed toward a cliff - our national debt is getting incomprehensibly huge and irretractible, and nobody has the guts to make the sacrifices and raise the taxes to the solve the problem. Meanwhile, we have to muddle through to the end, don't we?

I guarantee, if you elect me, it will be for one term, and I will raise taxes through the roof and I will cut government spending at every unnecessary turn, and EVERYONE will suffer the natural outcome of living far beyond their means for the last 40 years. But, since I am not running, we still have a little more time to be decadent before the end.

Bruce

[SNIP]

A Dictatorship Of The Proletariat! By that, of course, we mean a dictatorship over the proletariat, not by the proletariat.

The dictatorship will be managed by the Party's vanguard elite, naturally, in accordance with historical and revolutionary necessity.

My files should increase by some 10,000% just in order to keep track of all the counter-revolutionary troublemakers. Until we get the administrative court mechanism functioning and liquidate the real incorrigibles, that is.

As comrade Stalin once said: "For some people, four walls are three too many." What a wit!

Yes, SWL QSLs were HUGE in the 1950s and 1960s.

Popular Electronics and Electronics Illustrated even assigned "call letters" to SWLs which they used on very attractive cards.

I still use mine occasionally and even though I am a ham I still enjoy sending out SWL cards. Stations seem to like getting them too.

Do a search on the Internet for "WPE" and you'll probably see a lot of the cards we used to send around.

There are power tube rebuilders in Louisiana and in California. As the tubes get bigger they are generally easier to renew. BTW: there are industrial furnaces that use high power RF. Transmitting is not the only use for these tubes.

Rush Limbaugh sends money to PETA every time you hear his theme song.
His deal with Chrissie Hynde (sic) requires that he give all royalties to PETA, for his use of "My City was Gone" as his theme song.

I have a K3 with a built-in interface. With my old Ten Tec I used a Radio Shack ground loop eliminator (a pair of 600:600 audio transformers) with good results. Keep some snap-on ferrites nearby if you have RF in your shack. Turn off all computer audio (beeps, honks, etc.) other than your radio. Do not watch porn if in PTT mode.

"The new ITK 112 triode, intended for high-power induction and

You dislike the Bible so much that you are willing too make up a ludicrous lie in hopes that someone is dumb enough to believe you? Surely you jest. Just on the outside chance....oh never mind....I know you're lying...lol.

The pages of a Bible are wayyyy too thin and would be the last type of firestarter to use. If someone if going to take up all that room in their pack to place a Bible (of all things) for tinder...lol...they would have to be borderline mentally challenged IMO. Why carry all that weight and take up pack space when you could carry a little tin packed with cotton balls coated in petroleum jelly? You I guess? ;-P

I understand no violence and all. Many people will spout on about "God is a God of love" etc. etc. and indeed he is. I forget the verses that talk about the Lord in that light (I could look them up) but they also seem to "forget" the next verses where he also says "He is a God of anger / vengeance and wrath. It has nothing to do with the 'reader' being or not being non violent and humble - I do agree with that.

Curiously, the Radio Ukraine International streaming audio feed is still running on their website. Very odd indeed. The website doesn't show

Good post.:-) I'm not going to start touching on the ones that you questioned. You've read enough of my take to know more than likely where I'm coming from. I really liked that last paragraph, made me smirk - in a good way - on the "if you elect me."

Here's the thing that concerns me from the point where you said "EVERYONE will suffer" etc. etc. Actually I don't think many in this country know/knows the meaning of truly suffering but I understand what you're saying. But I don't live past my means (I don't think)...only "extras" that I could eleminate to save would be internet/cable. I finally got rid of my landline, with my phone provider FINALLY extending their coverage for my area -- it's just didn't seem prudent to have an extra phone.

We've cut back on groceries and it's been at least a couple years since I've actually sat down in a restaraunt and had someone actually make my food and wait on me. Haven't went out and watched a movie since the last Rocky movie came out, so that shows how long that's been.

I don't take my weekly Sunday drive that I used, I always looked forward to it, but it's just wasting gas. I guess what I'm getting at is I don't live an elaborate life and go on vacations/cruises like many do and when it starts getting tight for me - - I know it's getting somewhat bad. My last radio purchase I ever planned on making was one of the R75's - so I could see for myself if the noise floor was lower than some of my other pieces and if it would open up another side of monitoring for me. I don't see how I'm going to be able to do it, at least in the near future. I haven't bought anymore knives or things like that.

The only "extra" thing I do for fun and fresh air - that I don't have to do- is getting in my boat. Even at that, it's just a little 15ft. bass boat and I can drive forever without hardly any gas. I love to fish and/or just get out and cruise, hopefully it never gets so bad financially that I feel the need to sell my boat. I'd probably go through a year of depression if I had to do that.;-)

What's your story Col. if I may ask? I won't check your IP or anything to find out on my own either. Do you live in Russia? Formerly lived there? Is your name and posting history meant somewhat in jest? Do you really feel it's better for the people to live in that type of "setup" for lack of a better word, if so - why? Thanks.

Your use of "crazy" Dave is pushing it a tad far. You may be right though on the "getting a limited view of things." I use to subscribe to four different newspapers, not including our local rag, I don't subscribe anymore. I read our local via internet now. I've never once watched Limbaugh on tv, I remember being accused of that, I know I happened upon him a couple of times on the radio and chose not to listen. He lost what credibility he had, if any, when he came clean about swallowing all the pills he did and going doctor shopping. If that had been me or you - we'd have landed in prison IMO.

I did for the first time maybe three months ago - I watched that morning show "Fox and friends." I have heard and quickly found out that they're slanted wayyyy on the republican side. I tuned to that particular show because I was told our former newsgal Gretchen Carlson is on that show and looking extremely nice as usual. So yeah, I definitely don't infiltrate my mind with "news" like I used to.

I forgot to add. I've heard of the Tea thing and don't have a freeking clue what it's about other than hearing something about getting rid of taxes. I figure they were made to take the eyes of both of the other parties that are screwing things up pretty bad. Which "side" is claiming to agree with the Tea People? Just curious.

Isn't that kinda what the big bitch is about? What about the ones like me and Kevin that say it's all bullcrap to begin with? When I say (or Jesse Ventura who was right there says) we're all being conned - then others label you "crazy"? It almost sounds like "get in line with our thinking" or you're a looney tune. I am only speaking for me when I say I feel like "I don't deserve the government we're getting."

The Fascistas have a pretty solid bubble over most of America; you really have to be on guard 24/7. I get my news from my scanners and from the BBC World Service. I do not believe anything else.

The USA is a failed state. As soon as we figure this out we're going to be really pissed.

There's a permanent in junction from the California State Supreme Court that prevents local law enforcement from arresting a medical marijuana patient for simple possession or use. This is between me and my medical practitioners.

My short time memory is coming back.
JT or Dave did say 460, but a guy phoned into their radio talk show and he told them it is 420.

NYC doormen strike averted.Do doormen show people the door? There are probally as many doormen in NYC as there are taxi cabs, over 3,000 of them.I don't think there are any doormen in Jackson.I have never seen one around here before.

Thanks for your generous comments fella's.
I am indeed blessed by having two lovely DX sites by the sea.
Jongengat is even better than Seefontein = radio paradise!

Yes I have lost weight due to my awful year medical wise last year. I am firing on all cylinders again now and feeling fine.
I'm pushing 73 now and you shrivel with old age. If you look back on the first DXpeditions you will see that I was not so short next to my DX pal Vince before.

My U.S. DX mate Guy Atkins has posted the Perseus data files on his website and lots of DXer's all over the world are finding new stations not heard before. Perseus SDR is certainly a fascinating and absorbing radio tool - I'm having immense fun.

Back in the 1980s, one of the Space Shuttles which was riding piggyback on a transport Airplane flew low over Jackson,Mississippi, flying low so us backwater hicks could get a good look up thar at it.I think it was at Parham Bridges Park in Jackson where it was advertized on tv noos.I went over there to get a good looksee.

I was working at Delta Cotton Oil in Jackson when the first Space Shuttle went up into orbit, in 1981.I worked in the solvent extraction plant at Delta Cotton Oil, Hexane (Hexane is kin to lighter fluid, Very Flammable stuff!) fluid in there for extracting the oil from the cotton seeds, so of course no radios or anything else that could cause a spark was allowed in there.

I would think it's an induction thing. The circulating currents set up in the metal do the heating. With wood, it may well be something like microwaves, heating the water content.

Not to stay off SW topic, but one really amazing book I came across is "Listening to the Enemy"',ISBN0-8420-2275-9. Some of the reports gathered by radio monitoring as far back as early 30's sheds much light to why Japan went to war against US (or was it the other way?). And why the Empire of the Rising Sun actually remained neutral with USSR until the bitter end! And why was it Japan that has been used as A-bomb proving ground and not nazi Germany.

Liberty Net for Week of April 17-24

http://3950.net/2010/04/liberty-net-for-week-of-april-17-24/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

LATELY thereï¿½s been some real disagreement and debate on the Liberty Net, the longest-running discussion net in Amateur Radio history. Some participants believe that virtually all politicians are liars and totally corrupt servants of the moneyed oligarchs, except perhaps for a tiny number of right-libertarians like Ron and Rand Paul, and populists like James Traficant and Eliot Spitzer. Other ï¿½Liberty Nettersï¿½ believe that the only exceptions to criminal politicians can be found in left-progressives like Dennis Kucinich and the late Ted Kennedy. Is this conflict resolvable? The two sides also have diametrically opposed views on the Tea Party movement. Will patriots who oppose the oligarchs ever come to a consensus? I donï¿½t know, but the free speech and cross-fertilization of ideas are bracing and thought-provoking.

Here are some of the highlights of this weekï¿½s Net:

ï¿½ The FBI has officially admitted that there was ï¿½ when there were still patriots in the FBI ï¿½ an FBI file on Obamaï¿½s grandfather, and they also admit that that file was destroyed. Was it because BHOï¿½s grandfather was a friend of Communist Party member and drug dealer Frank Marshall Davis? (15 minutes)

ï¿½ Is hatred for White people the central motivating factor driving Obamaï¿½s attempted ï¿½wealth redistributionï¿½ schemes? (19 minutes)

ï¿½ Bill Clinton has now openly stated that ï¿½all this anti-government talkï¿½ is a prelude to civil war in the United States. (20 minutes)

ï¿½ We should all remember the victims of the government kill team that murdered the innocent men, women, and children in Waco, Texas 17 years ago. (30 minutes)

ï¿½ In Iraq, the U.S. government is forcing farmers to use sterile hybrid (and genetically modified) seeds sold by Monsanto Corporation ï¿½ which means the farmers cannot use seeds from their own crops to plant next year. (37 minutes)

ï¿½ We need an investigation into the exact role of Hank Paulson at Goldman Sachs when it was issuing fraudulent debt securities. We already know that hedge fund firm Paulson and Company was created by Goldman specifically to hide the fact that they were betting against their own investors. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ Itï¿½s important to remember that Goldman Sachs (and its ilk) is not an American company like Collins or Hallicrafters ï¿½ they make nothing; they just take ï¿½ and fund politicians like Barack Hussein Obama who steer billions of dollars their way. Furthermore, the parasites who created Goldman Sachs will ï¿½retireï¿½ the name and surface under another name whenever it serves their purposes. (1 hour 28 minutes)

ï¿½ NuShawn Williams, the AIDS-infected Black man who purposely infected 13 White females (and one non-White female) with HIV, most of them between the ages of 12 and 17, and who stated that his goal was to infect 300 by having multiple sex partners every day, is due to be released this week. There has been a move to detain him civilly, but that can only last for 60 days. (2 hours 12 minutes)

ï¿½ The idea of total international ï¿½interdependenceï¿½ is a poisonous one, which threatens to destroy the individual character of nations and peoples ï¿½ and which reduces choice for the individual, who will increasingly be forced to conform to one global standard. (3 hours 0 minutes)

ï¿½ What is the best word to describe George Soros and his kind? (3 hours 7 minutes)

Donï¿½t forget you can download the Liberty Net right here on http://3950.net ï¿½ or listen live via N2SAG or N2IRJ. Thanks as always to Vic, W1WCR who makes it all happen every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time somewhere within 10 kHz or so of 3950 kHz.

Kevin - I was asked this and didn't know myself. When you make this post every week, is this what the next program is going to be about?
Follow me? Is this a "guide" to the upcoming Saturday night show? TIA

Do you have a lawn mower, a walk behind lawn mower? Does it have a Briggs & Stratton vertical shaft engine on it? Of course you know where the oil drain plug is.

Last year that B HO ButtKisser (he once told me he is sixty two years old) pushed his walk behind lawn mower (it has a Briggs & Stratton vertical shaft engine on it, so do my two walk behind lawn mowers) over here and he rattled my front screen door, he said,,, Show me where that drain plug is!

The S.O.B. was too STUPID to look for it himself.

He sits in a plastic chair on that little front porch over there and holding a hand mirror and picking at what he called a hair growth on his face.

Peter's right -- it's a guide for some of the more notable moments in the _recording_ that was just posted. I'm sorry if that wasn't more clear. Since the Liberty Net is really not a show at all, but a loosely-structured open discussion with an emphasis on free speech, there'd be no way for me to predict what will be on the air next week!

Every week Marty, N2IRJ, uploads his recording of the Net, and I post a link to that recording in the "Liberty Net Audio" list in the upper right column on http://3950.net/ -- usually within one day of the Net itself. Then a few days later I post my article with a brief discussion of the highlights.

With best regards,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Announcements are one thing. An original document is something else.

There is a reason why Obiteme had those records sealed. Given the impact they would have on his eligibility to run, whether there is something to these challenges or not, he's raised the questions, himself.

Your efforts are much appreciated, but may I suggest that
"April 17 Liberty Net" might be less confusing than saying
"Liberty Net for Week of April 17-24".

Maybe you're right -- but I hate to have an article title that discourages the uninitiated from reading it because they might think it's "out of date."

Maybe I should just title them with a snippet from some discussion theme, and leave the time-stamping to the recording (which N2IRJ always timestamps), the CMS, and Usenet.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Or refer directly to the recording. Not everyone who'd be interested in the content has a good listening venue. I, myself, no stranger to tough captures, find that some signals from the Liberty Net are not easily readable, while the recording allows me to hear the signals I may miss.

Similar benefits may apply to others.

But one things I do suggest is that you continue. I don't often agree with the conclusions, or the presentation of some of the Liberty Net members, but these types of discussions, throughout the culture, have been taking place in the shadows for far too long. If nothing else, exposing the Liberty Net to a wider audience begins dialog that is essential for maintaining the direct involvement of the People in their government.

While broadcasting on the ham bands is illegal, such discussion groups are not.

That said, live streaming from a monitoring point may be a next step.

Richard Barrett (white supremicist MOFO, he was originally from New Jersey, one of those Lunatics) done Dead, GOOD!
I saw and I heard about it earlier today on Breaking News, local yokel backwater hick Jackson tv news.

They say he commited homicide/suicide upon himself.He lived on East Petros Road just across the Mighty Pearl River in Rankin County.Myself and my old buddy used to know a guy (Carl May and his wife, Maxine) who lived on Petros Road.Carl was in the U.S.Navy in Asia in World War Two.Carl and Maxine passed away not many years ago.My old buddy (he was in the U.S.Navy too) bought the house and the acres of land that Carl and his wife owned.He wants to sell that house, but he will not sell it to just anybody.The house is not advertised on the market place.

That is what I was wondering, I'm sure that band's primary user is the U.S. military and Amateur radio users are secondary users. I'm sure it is against several laws for any police agency to interfere with our military. The Air Force has been active in protecting their part of the 70 cm band in two places in the US.

For the first time in my life I'm stable and sustainable. This involves small amounts of caffeine, cannabis, hydromorphone, paracetamol, fluoxetine, various metabolic moderators, and a meat-free diet.

I retire early and get up early. Am relatively healthy and wealthy. Wise? Remains to be seen.

No, dagnabbit, I was not doing HF at that time. Love to have them back - we get great Pacific reception generally around here, although the best bands for those fellows (60, 75, 90) are usually noisy as all

Eh - too biotechnical for me. I just eats chow. Meat-free, of course. Also avoid the eggs and dairy when possible (except chocolate). More power to you, though! I admire anyone who can develop a good regimen and stick to it. There is certainly some

All we get are lots of big corona holes disrupting communications. Had another one (solar wind stream) hit last night. 40 meters was terrible today.

Disrupted the midwest and northeast. 40 meters was great last night.
This morning was terrible. Tried to call a friend in Louisiana this afternoon and reception was just starting to improve. Maybe it will be back to normal in time for the Liberty Net.

20m was not bad either last night - I heard a passel of people from the midwest coming through here in CA like they were next door. That faded after about 0500.

You'd love 'em until you were in one. When I was 12, one touched down just a couple blocks away from my aunt's house in St. Louis. They are NOT fun to watch up that close.. : /

Exactly, if he's legal, cool. But has there been any other person running for the presidency or heaven forbid - an actual sitting US president that has spent MILLIONS of dollars to seal not only his birth certificate....but also his college records?

If everything is OK, which I doubt it is, but if it is - he did EVERYTHING one could do too make it look like he wasn't even eligible to run. <shrug> Like I said many a times, only in America could that happen and that is cause for a great deal of concern. Just my opinion.

But I have wayyyy more hick in me, absolutely 0% spearchucker. I can prove that from my family tree going way back than I care to mention. Are you saying because I live in Cincinnati that I hear ebonics? I haven't seen one black soul in three months, I don't really see "any" if I stay here in my neck of the woods. There is one family (as far as I know) that is black in this area and I only see them if they're out sitting on their porch. That's the facts. ;-)

Dave, you may have mentioned it in here before and I just don't remember it. But apparently there is something wrong with you health wise? Of course I know of the caffeine (which I don't do because it increases pain in most people- me being one) and pot (which I don't do because it's illegal.) But what are the other three? The one ending in morphone I take - is a pain reliever narcotic? What's the other two if I may ask? Because I'm not looking them up.

I know of four hams that once a year go away (they don't tell me where;-)) and all they do is listen - which is strange IMO for hams.
They brings lots of Corona beer with them, I wonder if it's because they like Corona beer or well....you know. :O)

Huh - interesting. 60m here is just so-so, and the rest of them are weak or dead at 0600z. The sites say a G1 storm is going at 0600z, with pretty high A and K indices, so I'm not too surprised. I listened to CRI relay via Spain tonight on 31m, and the signal was OK at 0300-0400, but after that the band just dropped to where it is now. Oh, well.

Yeah, I was going to respond to Bruce till I saw what you said, you said that right. I always kind of felt the same way as Bruce till the mid 90's (I think.) It was maybe three in the morning and I was at a twenty four hour store and I knew the weather was getting bad. I had my handheld scanner on with the ear bud and could tell it was getting realll bad. Me - like a dumbass jumped into my car with all the antennas and played amateur tornado chaser. It was the dumbest thing I ever did in my life and if I'd have been maybe a couple minutes earlier I would have been toast. I learned a couple things that morning and one of them is if you're going to go chasing trouble in the sky, don't do it under the cloak of darkness. That nightime/early morning storm killed I forget how many people and leveled parts of neighborhoods and crossed the interstate and until just maybe a couple years ago - you could still see where it took the tops of trees off or uprooted them on both sides of the highway.

Before there were weather babes people would build their houses on the from most tornadoes.

As far as I remember, there are no special rules for nets -- but intentional interference is against the rules. That's why WA9KJI -- one of the most egregious jammers of the Liberty Net -- lost his license.

That's kind of sad. There's a cool guy about a 1/4 mile up the hill who drives over-the-road and collects European sports sedans. Now that you mention it, he is black.

I have an Hispanic UPS driver on one side, a redneck named Dewey on the other side, and an active-duty GI and his widowed father (also Hispanic) over the back fence. I think the non-linear audio guy across the street is Armenian (though I haven't asked).

We have Mormons within sight, they are the scariest.

Actually, though transceivers vary, most do produce a real AM signal. (The old Drake C-lines produced DX-60-like "controlled carrier" screen modulation, which _is_ AM though the average carrier level goes up and down with modulation. A few older Collins and other SSB transceivers just insert carrier on an SSB signal, producing a rather distorted poor excuse for an AM signal called
"AME" or "AM equivalent." But they're rare. Most transceivers today generate real AM.)

They do this by either bypassing the SSB filter or replacing it with a wider one, and then unbalancing the balanced modulator by adding an adjustable DC component to its audio input port. When the audio and DC levels are balanced correctly, this can produce perfect amplitude modulation. (Some amateurs, of course, don't adjust things correctly, which can cause distortion and other problems.)

Before all my equipment was stolen with the complicity of the FBI, I had a modified Kenwood TS440S which used this scheme. The stock 440 produced pretty good AM, but I wanted better. The modifications included bypassing the low IF filters entirely in the AM transmit mode, and reconfiguring the audio chain for better waveform fidelity. It produced 25 watts of AM with better quality than many broadcast stations.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Paracetamol is Tylenol. Fluoxetine is Prozac. Metformin is for blood sugar. Hydrochlorothiazide is for hypertension. I also take something 10100 KHz is the 30 M amateur band, and is digital only. There is

The type of sync detector that needs no carrier whatever in order to lock on a DSB signal is called a Costas loop -- after John P.
Costas, who invented it. (Costas, by the way, did make a few rare appearances on high-fidelity 40 and 75 meter amateur AM well into the 2000s. He died in 2008.)

Sadly, no commercial receiver I am aware of uses a Costas loop. They all use some form of carrier lock.

The last time I tuned a receiver with a Costas loop in it was in 1975, at the home of W3DUQ, using his National HRO-60 with his homebrew 7360-based stereo sync system. It was amazing, and gave you the ability to copy signals so deep in interference that you simply couldn't believe it.

Interestingly, the (now out of production) Racal 6790 series used a form of exalted carrier sync detection in which the incoming AM signal was limited in the same way an FM detector limits, stripping off all amplitude-modulated components.

Then the amplitude-limited carrier was applied to the carrier input of the product detector to detect the AM signal.

This allowed for good sync detection (except perhaps for _extremely deep_ selective fades) with the added benefit that _the signal was always locked_. There were no heterodynes while tuning or if an off-frequency station broke in on the QSO. It tuned just like a regular diode detector AM receiver, with AM signals always demodulated properly even as you tuned through them. If anyone wants to give me one of those Racals, I'll take it.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

I've had my reputation besmirched by false accusations. I've been made into a fourth-class citizen. I'm almost unemployable. I've been impoverished.

Nevertheless, one of my goals is to get back on amateur radio, with a better signal than ever before, and talk to my friends again. I don't know exactly when that day will be, but it will be a happy day. Until then, I can help the Net by publishing the recordings.

I am with my family, and with my beloved children, every day now. I am able to see the trees and flowers and the sun again. And I can converse and learn via the Internet.

You'll be hearing more from me.

You have to admit that the oily creature has triggered an instinctive patriotic response, more than I've seen in decades. (If the patriotic response falls under the dead hands of the AIPAC-Republicans or the AIPAC-Fox-News crowd, though, it will just become another nullity and sucker-list operation.)

One hopes that when stronger and healthier forces come to this continent to clean up the mess that dysgenics, treason, and racially suicidal belief systems will have caused, they will allow us to survive as a people.

If the "stronger hands" come from China or the Middle East, there is probably no hope. Our fate will be like that of the Tibetans today, who are slated for extinction, or the Amalekites of Old Testament legend, who were probably exterminated, though one doubts the veracity of the myth when it comes to the exact method.

If the stronger forces are European or from the more civilized strata of Latin America, there is a chance that we will be allowed to exist as something more than breeding stock to produce fair-skinned sexual playthings for our rulers. After all, look at what the Soviet tyrants did to the Eastern Europeans. They did strip them of almost all their wealth and possessions and freedom. They did imprison or kill those who loved freedom or truth more than bread and obedience. But they didn't import millions upon millions of radically different invaders to displace or outbreed them into extinction.

And the elite of even the arguably most corrupt regime in Latin America, that of Mexico, is more related to us than it is to its own underclass, which it is exporting to us as a safety valve more than

as a weapon. The attitude they will take to the descendants of Jefferson and Lafayette and their kin, once the Washington regime has fallen, is a question mark.

Of course, if devolution takes place slowly enough, the U.S. may break up relatively peacefully and a number of European-American states may emerge. There are strong secessionist movements in Vermont and Alaska, and neo-Confederates are almost as numerous as Baptist churches (you can find one on every other steetcorner, usually within sight of one another) here in the benighted South.

Contrary to what someone posted earlier, secession is not unconstitutional. It is, in fact, quintessentially constitutional and legal. If a state can voluntarily join the republic, it can certainly leave it whenever it so chooses. A union you are not allowed to leave is not a republic. It is not even a nation. It is a tyrannical empire.

The day that the tyrant arrested and imprisoned the legislature of Maryland because they were about to vote "the wrong way" was the end of the legal government in Washington, DC.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

How about restoring the constitution?

If we to have constitutional, legal government again, restoration is necessary, because the constitution has already been trampled upon
-- by having its most important provisions simply ignored or "interpreted" out of existence by politically-motivated judges appointed for that express purpose.

The main defense the Founders set up to protect Americans from the tyranny of kings ï¿½ and the tyranny of the majority ï¿½ was the Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

It says, in effect, that the central government possesses only those powers expressly granted by the Constitution and no other powers whatever. And that is how it was understood and applied until the second Roosevelt demanded and received Lenin-like economic power (ï¿½for our own good,ï¿½ of course) and supine judges allowed it despite its obvious illegality.

(Of course, Abraham Lincolnï¿½s arrest of the legislature of Maryland to prevent them from ï¿½voting wrongly,ï¿½ and the imposition of several pretended Amendments to the Constitution while states were under military dictatorships ï¿½ so-called ï¿½Reconstructionï¿½ ï¿½ and their citizens disenfranchised, were also completely illegal, among many other things.)

Washington meddling in and controlling local public education?
Absolutely prohibited by the Tenth Amendment.

Washington telling employers who they must hire? Absolutely prohibited by the Tenth Amendment.

Washington controlling your ability to sell your home or land to whomever you choose? Absolutely prohibited by the Tenth Amendment.

Washington telling you what substances you can or cannot consume?
Absolutely prohibited by the Tenth Amendment.

Washington authorizing a consortium of private banks (like the Federal Reserve) to control all money and credit? Absolutely prohibited by the Tenth Amendment.

All the other sections of the Bill of Rights prohibit the federal government from doing one thing or another, respectively. But the Tenth is like all the other Amendments on steroids. It prohibits Washington from doing anything, except those things specifically called for in the rest of the document.

However, by torturing and twisting the words of the preamble (ï¿½ï¿½yeah, we can do just about anything that ï¿½promotes the general welfare,ï¿½ right?ï¿½) and by other means, the Tenth Amendment has been rendered null and void for all practical purposes. Those who did this said they needed the extra powers to do us all a lot of good.

But, in the process of trying to do good (if indeed that was ever their intention), they also blatantly lied, outrageously broke the supreme law of the land, rendered almost all of their Acts and Bills totally illegal, and caused the regime in Washington, whatever party is in power, to be quite illegitimate and utterly unlawful.

With all good wishes,

Kevin.

Am looking for the best choice of a portable AM radio, to be used mainly to listen to talk radio, both local and national stations.

Audio sound quality and decent tuner are a must. Inclusion of a shortwave band would be nice, but not a requirement. I do want digital tuning, and station presets.

Have had a CC Crane radio for five years, and getting a bit tired of it. Good sound, but quality control is awful, and digital readout is flaky.

thanks !!

I understand, Brenda - but...

I chased them in Texas 1982-1983. I was an atmo sci grad student at Texas Tech. I was:

Hit by a small tornado, probably F0-F1
Hit by baseball-sized slushy hail Hit by lightning

We saw many tornadoes, although when we were that close, we had other things on our minds besides taking pictures. Nonetheless, I'd do it all again, every day, if I could. It was the best thing I ever did.

I do have a few photos:

Bingo - storm chasing is not a nighttime activity, especially if the storm is tornadic.

We get several each year in California, but in the general absence of the big midwestern-style supercells, fed by Gulf moisture and catalyzed by Great Plains lows and Texas drylines, that power the mighty Plains whirlywinds, ours are usually pretty weak. An F1 tornado here is a big deal.

I hear ya.

Our old departed dog Buster had a life-threatening disease from age 7 onward.

10 years later he was still with us.

...but he got old, and his quality of life had gotten pretty low - so we gave him rest.

I still miss him terribly after a year gone :-(

RIP Buster

Anyone waving a placard or voicing dissent against the Obama administration dare not protest too loudly. President Bill Clinton has reignited the incendiary rhetoric of April 19, 1995. He effectively sealed his second White House bid in 1996 by blaming conservative talk radio for inciting the heartland bomber Timothy McVeigh. Now, fifteen years later, the Democratic playbook promises to claim far more victims. Only this time, hardworking Americans stand in the crosshairs.

In a recent CNN interview, the former commander-in-chief sounded a battle cry to the political left, press and pundits alike: Vilify the Tea Party, deeming its membership capable of the violent rampage of the Oklahoma City bomber. This stigma imperils the most influential grassroots movement in modern history. Nothing threatens to muzzle free speech more than being stereotyped a "Tim McVeigh wanna-be."

For me, this political correctness run amok triggers déjà vu. The smear campaign represents an instant replay of the backlash that I endured as a TV news reporter on the trail of the infamous John Doe 2. I was branded a "racist" for pursuing leads that illustrated how Iraqi intelligence agents, soldiers who served in Saddam Hussein's army during the 1991 Persian Gulf War, infiltrated the United States in order to recruit and assist Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols in executing the worst act of terror in 20th-century America.

What I discovered shatters the Tim McVeigh mold as an "angry white male" who vented his hostility through published letters to newspaper editors -- and soon thereafter, crossed the threshold from peaceful discontent to wholesale mass murder. Instead, copiously researched evidence, as outlined in my book The Third Terrorist: The Middle East Connection to the Oklahoma City Bombing, exposes McVeigh as the ultimate traitor, acting in collusion with al-Qaeda terrorists and hostile foreign governments such as Iran and Iraq.

The decorated Bradley gunner openly expressed to an Army buddy during Operation Desert Storm that he "wanted to become a mercenary for the Middle East because they paid the most." Upon returning from the Persian Gulf War, he failed the cut for the elite Special Forces. The combat hero suffered a blow to the ego from which he would never recover.

The lanky, awkward teenager from upstate New York had joined the military to shake the childhood stigmas of ordinariness and anonymity. Beneath his clean-cut persona, he harbored a warped sense of empathy for Osama bin Laden, the first World Trade Center mastermind Ramzi Yousef, and Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein. During his incarceration, McVeigh penned personal essays unveiling his deep-seated sympathies for Middle Eastern terrorists that fueled his anti-government zealotry. He unabashedly expressed regret for the killing two Iraqi enemy combatants, for which he earned the Bronze Star.

Jailhouse interviews recently broadcasted by MSNBC confirm McVeigh's obsessive need for notoriety. Shortly before his 2001 execution, he granted unlimited access to two authors of his biography in order to dictate how history would portray his role as the Oklahoma City "super bomber." McVeigh lauded himself as an emotionless executioner, an ingenious mastermind, and the author of his own fate.

Demented pride impelled the American terrorist to fire off letters to the press following my appearances on cable news programs. His ire inflamed as I announced to a nationwide audience that Osama bin Laden, Iraq, and Iran sponsored the Oklahoma City operation. My investigation demeaned the Army sergeant's status and relegated his role to that of a mule, or rather, a button-pusher. In the lexicon of the intelligence community, Timothy McVeigh was nothing more than a "lily-white" delivery boy -- someone who had no ostensible ties to a Middle Eastern terrorist organizations, and thereby could operate below the law enforcement radar screen. He was a handpicked dupe, set up to take the fall in order to save his Islamic collaborators from prosecution. Bill Clinton's FBI ensured just that.

The Bureau failed miserably in its prodigious quest to find McVeigh's legendary accomplice, John Doe 2. It soon became evident that federal agents conducted a myopic manhunt bent on collaring a "homegrown" third terrorist of Caucasian, not foreign, descent. In early 1996, the Bureau conducted an unprecedented investigation in a herculean effort to connect a religious compound of white separatists and a band of Aryan Republican Army bank robbers to the Oklahoma City bombers. After all, they were cut from the same cloth as Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols. These right-wing extremists indubitably fit the profile of the angry white men who would avenge their hatred of the establishment by destroying a federal complex.

After conducting twenty-five thousand witness interviews, the FBI could not find one witness who tied the neo-Nazi suspects to downtown Oklahoma City, Timothy McVeigh, the Ryder truck, getaway vehicles, or the bombsite. All had irrefutable alibis. In short, the FBI failed to produce one eyewitness account, fingerprint, motel registration log, or phone record linking these alleged conspirators to the commission of the crime. The judge who presided over Terry Nichols' 2004 state murder trial ruled the Bureau's pursuit of additional domestic terrorists amounted to nothing more than "hyperbole and a dry hole."

The FBI compliantly accepted the court's rebuke rather than take receipt of my voluminous dossier indicting Iraqi soldiers in the crime. In 1997, when I attempted to surrender the witness statements and corroborative evidence, the FBI flatly refused to take it. But I persisted, and in 1999, FBI Agent Dan Vogel accepted the witness affidavits and investigative file. From there, the documents simply vanished.

To this day, the FBI has failed to investigate the multiple sightings of Iraqi Republican Guardsman Hussain Al-Hussaini in the presence of Timothy McVeigh prior to the bombing, exiting the bomb-laden Ryder truck the morning of April 19, and escaping the ill-fated Murrah Building in a getaway vehicle pursued by the FBI in an all-points-bulletin issued for Middle Eastern terrorists. More significantly, two federal court rulings establish that this Iraqi soldier has no provable alibi for the morning of the bombing.

The FBI never questioned Hussain Al-Hussaini and has refused repeated requests from Congress and the press to clear him officially of complicity in the Murrah Building bombing. Why? It is my firm belief that Bill Clinton and Janet Reno should be called upon to answer that question. Meanwhile, the Democrats will continue to spin the fictional portrait of McVeigh to the party's advantage.

Undoubtedly, Tim McVeigh espoused hate. He advocated civil disobedience. He called for armed resistance to punish a republic he no longer trusted to protect the liberty of its citizenry. But by no means does his crime symbolize anything other than the maniacal act of an unstable individual living on the fringe of society. For Bill Clinton to draw a comparison between a bloodthirsty terrorist and Tea Party conservatives, many of whom are senior citizens on walkers, is nothing short of a national outrage.

However, those threatened by the mounting ranks of dissatisfied voters will continue to stoke the flames of demagoguery. McVeigh was a soldier of fortune -- a far cry from the peaceful citizens of the Tea Party. Yet until the evidence embodied in The Third Terrorist is prosecuted and validated in a courtroom setting, Americans who hold their elected leaders to account will continue to bear the onus of "Tim McVeigh wanna-bes." The historical record, as written by the Clinton Department of Justice, leaves the door open to malign protestors as latent terrorists just awaiting the impetus to act. This insidious distortion of truth demands redress.

The time has arrived to exorcise the ghosts of Oklahoma City and bring to account the Arab terrorists who butchered innocent Americans and the officials who suppressed the evidence of their guilt.

What is SourceWatch?

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7352

SourceWatch is a project of the Center for Media and Democracy (CMD)
an Anti-capitalist, anti-corporate organization

What is Center for Media and Democracy?

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=7353

In Center for Media and Democracy's (CMD) view, capitalism generally, and corporations in particular, are the principal root causes of societal ills in the U.S. and abroad. The Capital Research Center, which rates the ideological leanings of nonprofit organizations, places CMD near the extreme far left of the spectrum. The website ActivistCash, which provides "information about the funding source[s] of radical anti-consumer organizations and activists," characterizes CMD as "a counterculture public relations effort disguised as an independent media organization."

Members of the CMD Board of Directors include: Joseph Mendelson, a former Director of Friends of the Earth and co-founder of the environmental organization Center for Food Safety; Anna Lappe, co-founder of the social justice organization Small Planet Institute and a former W.K. Kellogg Foundation fellow; David Meritt, former Executive Director of the Citizens Utility Board (a Wisconsin consumer advocacy group that opposes utility rate increases); Inger Stole, an assistant professor at the Institute of Communications Research; and Jan Miyasaki, an Asian American Studies professor at the University of Wisconsin.

The most notable CMD Board member is Ellen Braune, whose leftist affiliations are extensive and longstanding. She currently serves as Vice President of Communications at the Ms. Foundation for Women, and was formerly a Senior Vice President at Fenton Communications and a Communications Director for the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES). Part of the Soviet-controlled World Peace Council, CISPES was established in America in 1980 by high-ranking members of the Salvadoran Communist Party and Cuban intelligence to support El Salvador's murderous guerrilla bands and to influence American public opinion through protests and one-sided disinformation.

CMD was founded by the leftist writer and environmental activist John Stauber, who continues to serve as the Center's Executive Director.

Stauber began his activism in high school when he organized anti-Vietnam War protests and early Earth Day events. The co-author (with SourceWatch founder Sheldon Rampton) of six books, Stauber created the now-defunct website Vote2StopBush.org. He is also an unpaid advisor to several organizations, including the Action Coalition for Media Education, the Center for Food Safety, the Liberty Tree Foundation, the Media Education Foundation, and the Organic Consumers Association.

The aforementioned Sheldon Rampton currently serves as CMD's Research Director. A graduate of Princeton University, Rampton was formerly an outreach coordinator for the Wisconsin Coordinating Council on Nicaragua, a group established in 1984 to oppose President Reagan's efforts to stop the spread of Communism in Central America, and currently dedicated to promoting a leftist vision of "social justice in Nicaragua through alternative models of development and activism."

An April 2001 commentary in the liberal publication Village Voice said of Rampton and Stauber: "These guys come from the far side of liberal."

According to ActivistCash, "Sheldon Rampton and John Stauber operate ... from the presumption that any communication issued from a corporate headquarters must be viewed with a jaundiced eye. ... [T]hey recently referred to corporate PR as a propaganda industry, misleading citizens and manipulating minds in the service of special interests. Ironically, Rampton and Stauber have elected to dip into the deep pockets of multi-million-dollar foundations with special interest agendas of their own. Their books Mad Cow U.S.A. and Toxic Sludge Is Good For You were produced and promoted using grant monies from the Foundation for Deep Ecology ($25,000) and the Educational Foundation of America ($20,000), among others. Along with the more recent Trust Us, We're Experts, these books are scare-mongering tales about a corporate culture out of control, and each implies that the public needs rescuing. … If someone in a shirt and tie dares make a profit (especially if food or chemicals are involved), Rampton and Stauber are bound to have a problem with it. Unless, of course, that food is vegetarian, organic, certified fair-trade, shade-grown, biodynamic, or biotech-free — in which case, the sky's the limit!"

In his 2005 article, "Strategy for Progressives: Where Do We Go from Here?," Stauber lauded the violent 1999 anti-WTO protests in Seattle and the anti-Iraq War protests of 2003, though all these events were replete with political propaganda, which CMD professes to disdain. The fact that the propaganda was of a leftist nature made it acceptable to Stauber, who in the same article praised Moveon.org as a "brilliant and effective internet-based activist group."

CMD sponsors the following projects:

PR Watch Quarterly: "investigates and exposes how the public relations industry and other professional propagandists manipulate public information, perceptions and opinion on behalf of governments and special interests"

Spin of the Day: "offers web-based daily reporting on public relations, propaganda and media spin"

SourceWatch: an Internet-based "encyclopedia of people, issues and groups shaping the public agenda"

Congresspedia: "the 'citizen's encyclopedia' of the members of the US House and Senate" (This is a collaborative project of CMD and the Sunlight Foundation.)
In addition to these projects, CMD has established an in-house Resource Center that "answers inquiries from journalists and other members of the public seeking to understand the forces and influences behind current issues."

The Center also provides skills training sessions designed "to share best practices and success stories with citizen journalists and activist groups, through workshops and CMD's publications." These publications include the three previously cited Rampton-Stabuer books, as well as their other three: The Best War Ever: Lies, Damned Lies and the Mess in Iraq; Weapons of Mass Deception: The Uses of Propaganda in Bush's War on Iraq; and Banana Republicans: How the Right Wing is Turning America Into a One-Party State.

CMD officials make frequent media appearances to spread their message. In recent years, they have given interviews to such outlets as Air America Radio, The American Prospect, Al Jazeera, AlterNet, CommonDreams, Democracy Now!, Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting, Mother Jones, The Nation, The New York Times, and TomPaine.com.

The Center has collaborated with other leftist organizations on a number of projects and campaigns. For example:
CMD and Adbusters co-endorsed the 2001 "National Ad Slam Contest" (a project of the Ralph Nader-founded Commercial Alert), which awarded money to schools that barred advertisers from their premises.

CMD joined the Center for Food Safety (CFS) and the Humane Farming Association in filing two lawsuits against the federal government in 1999. Alleging that existing federal protections did not adequately protect the American public from Mad Cow Disease, the plaintiffs demanded changes to meat-processing and labeling regulations.

CMD is a member of the Foodspeak coalition organized by the Center for Science in the Public Interest, which seeks to give far greater legal latitude to critics who publicly condemn the food industry's allegedly unsafe practices. Other members of Foodspeak include Alliance for Justice, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Environmental Working Group, Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting, Greenpeace, the Natural Resources Defense Council, People for the American Way, Public Citizen, and the Union of Concerned Scientists.

At the height of the U.S. mad-cow scare, CMD's John Stauber shared a press-conference dais with the Environmental Working Group's Ken Cook, warning journalists that a "crisis" threatened America's meat supply. The event was organized by Environmental Media Services, the now-defunct media arm of Fenton Communications.

CMD is a member organization of the anti-technology Turning Point Project, whose Board member Joe Mendelson also sits on CMD's Board. CMD has received financial backing from the Ettinger Foundation, Funding Exchange, the Grodzins Fund, the HKH Foundation, the Leo J. & Celia Carlin Fund, the Litowitz Foundation, the Marisla Foundation, the Mostyn Foundation, the Panta Rhea Foundation, the Park Foundation, the Rockefeller Family Fund, the Schumann Center for Media and Democracy, the Threshold Foundation, the Wallace Global Fund, Richard & Rhoda Goldman Fund, the Foundation for Deep Ecology, the Harold K. Hochschild Foundation, the Carolyn Foundation, the Deer Creek Foundation, the Turner Foundation, the Educational Foundation of America, the Stern Family Fund, the Winslow Foundation, the DJB Foundation, the Bauman Family Foundation, the CarEth Foundation, and the Cold Mountain Foundation.

Hmmm - maybe its second harmonic is more potent than its fundamental - their 5050 here in California is usually pretty weak.

That part isn't. That's Congress -- as in "Congress shall make no law." The amendments were meant to limit its power and leave all powers not expressly delegated to the states or the people _as individuals_.

As far as I am aware, not even the most authority-worshipping writers have made the claim that the framers meant _Congress_ when they said all other powers are reserved to _the people_. Good grief!

Do you think that a President that ordered the mass murder of children in Waco, Texas isn't incendiary? It was incendiary for Timothy McVeigh, was it not? You think a Coulter or a Hannity would illicit the same response that Clinton caused by his actions on that fateful day.

Bill Clinton has yet to be tried for that crime, and history will show that America failed itself in those dark days.

Protesters signal openness to talks

Thai protesters offered Friday to end their demonstrations if Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva holds an election in three months, easing tensions in a six-week standoff that has killed 26 people and paralyzed Bangkok.

"We regret the loss of life and hope such incidents won't happen again," protest leader Veera Musikapong told supporters Friday. "We're willing to open a new round of negotiations under new conditions." At least five grenades exploded Thursday on a major business artery.
Talks last month collapsed after Abhisit rejected demands to dissolve parliament immediately, offering instead to call an election by year's end.

Bush fought for oil??? You may be right, that -may- have been the real reason, but as far as I know, that was NEVER publicly admitted to by the Bush administration -- essentially the American public was lied into two phony wars (that we are STILL paying the price for).

Anyway, even if Bush did do it "for oil", are you implying that Bush gets a free pass to kill thousands of Americans and tens of thousands of innocent civilians just because it was "for oil"? Does oil justify that?

> ...absolutely refused to kneel before him.

Well, I'm not sure about that. It may have had more to do with the Davidians having illegal weapons. The fire appeared to be accidental/unintentional. I don't think the ATF or Bill Clinton overtly planned on having a fire. The government probably would have been perfectly happy if the Davidians honored the ATF legal search warrant.

Finally, let's be pragmatic...

Yes, the 86 bogus Waco deaths were sad, even though accidental and not specifically planned.

However, Bush DID overtly plan the two bogus wars.

86 accidental deaths versus tens of thousands of deaths that we the people were lied into. So, you tell me, who is the bigger criminal, Clinton or Bush?

If you think Clinton should be tried for those 86 deaths, well, fair enough. But then I'm contending that Bush should be tried for the tens of thousands of deaths he lied us into.

Men have been warring over scarce natural resources, ever since the caveman learned how to use a club. Sounds like you're trying to reverse 50,000 years of history. Bush fought for oil, so you can cart your lazy ass in a 2000 pound metal box to the liquor store on a Saturday night.
Maybe if you learned to ride a bicycle, or walk, Bush wouldn't have had to fight for your slacker ass. Clinton's crime had nothing to do with acquiring scare resources for a slacker populace, but it had everything to do with tyranny, and that's what is criminal.

Actually, I understood it the first time I saw it. I do all kinds of puzzles, rebuses, etc. for fun on a daily basis. It keeps my mind fresh and active. One of the first things I do in the morning is a crossword puzzle.

Well sorry I don't have any black blood in me Dave. ;-P The family down in the village seem pretty nice. It's not like I get out of my car and run up to their porch and say hi - but I do wave and smile to them....and they in turn do also. I don't think I have every personally met a mormon, why are they scary?

If you had any in your area, you would most likely know it. Their missionaries work very much like those of the Jehovah's Witnesses... except that instead of Awake! and Watchtower, they leave you pamphlets about Joseph Smith and Family Home Evening.. and if you show even the slightest interest, they'll leave a Book of Mormon, too... and they'll keep coming back!

Their tenets are based pretty much on expediency: for generations they didn't allow blacks in the priesthood. Then Jimmy Carter threatened their tax exempt status because of it, and suddenly the church President had a vision in which the angel Moroni told him it was OK to have blacks in the priesthood... imagine that.. (mind you there are several levels of the priesthood in the LDS church, the two main categories being the Aaronic

(which starts at age 12) and the Melchizedek. Almost every male in the church over age 12 is a member of the priesthood..)

They do have their good points, though. They're really big on family (and have a lot of really big families!). They also have a church welfare system I very much admire: they will give aid (food, etc.) to any member that needs it at any time.. but that member is expected to repay the church by performing some service (when I was a kid, I did work in the fields when my stepdad got food from them). If government welfare were more like that, it wouldn't be such a drain on the taxpayers. Think of it.. instead of laying on a couch drinking beer and watching soap operas while living off the government dole, a person could be out cleaning up highways, washing police cars, tending parks, all manner of things that taxpayers now have to pay for..

-- an ex-Mormon (my stepmom decided right after she married my stepdad that all us kids were gonna be Mormons..)

I know your pain. I have been trying to get my Red Maple diesel generator replaced for over TWO YEARS. No success. The communists don't give a rat's ass about you after you buy one.

DO NOT BUY CHINESE CRAP.

The Canadian Standards Association has done nothing to help me. I have talked to them twice and have sent many emails.

It appears they are afraid of the commies. The CSA doesn't even seem too worried about the COUNTERFEIT approval stickers being used on the faulty generators.

What a scam.

More details here:

==========
TORONTO, ON ï¿½ September 26, 2007 ï¿½ CSA International, in cooperation with Fuzhou Launtop M&E Co. Ltd. and Better Source Asia, of Fuzhou City, China announces a voluntary recall of approximately 30,000 gasoline-and diesel-powered generators. The affected models were produced with uncertified circuit protectors, circuit breakers, receptacles and wiring and do not meet the applicable standards. The uncertified components and wiring may pose a shock and/or fire hazard. In addition, some generators may have circuit breakers bearing counterfeit (unauthorized use) registered trademarks belonging to CSA International.

No incidents or injuries have been reported related to the affected generators.

This recall affects all gasoline models rated for 950 W, 1200 W, 2500 W, 3000 W, 3800 W, 5000 W, and 6500 W and diesel models rated for 2200 W, 3600 W, 5000 W, 5500 W and 6000 W. The affected models may bear a CSA mark with or without file numbers 223771 or 233220.

These generators were sold in Canada and the United States under the brand names Alternative Power Source, Aurora, CM, Elim International,

Ener G, Genertek, Launtop, Portland, Power on the Go, Red Maple. The units were sold by retail, equipment auction houses and internet outlets for between $160.00 to $2,300.00 CDN

Owners of the subject generators are advised to stop using them immediately and are requested to return them to the point of purchase or to contact Fuzhou Launtop M&E Co. Ltd. toll free at 1-866-975-6748, between 11:00 am and 7:00 pm EST, Monday through Friday, or via the company website at www.launtop.cn for a free replacement.

Ah, that explains a lot then. I used to be a puzzle freak up until maybe ten-eleven years ago, there's definitely something to be said about exercising your mind. I read like a fool though, other than being in a good church (and there are very few IMO) or a 'real' radio store - being in a Borders or Barnes or our library is the funnest place for me.

Oh - I see now how you know that much about them. The only news I recently heard of the LDS was that Warren Jeffs {sp} fella, if that is who is really in charge of the mormons. Gotta say, he wasn't painted

Pretty strong post Kevin, not that I agree 100% with everything but I definitely "get it" and agree with more than the majority of what you stated.

I came upon this site yesterday, I haven't looked at everything on it yet but the thing that made we want to click on it was the talk of how closely internet sites AND Usenet groups are being monitored. I was told by an acquaintance that I may want to watch what I say - even on the groups I post to. I never come off as some crack pot like many do on some of the sites this link speaks of and I guess I shouldn't have been shocked when I was told last week that there is "literally" a file so too speak on EVERYONE that has ANYTHING negative to say about our government or leaders.

That's why I was quick to let Bruce know (I misunderstood him) that I wasn't for having any senators and congessman killed...lol. I can maybe understand monitoring someone that is definitely baked - but to build a file just on someones opinion or take is a tad too much IMO. But whatever. Something I have been aware of for maybe fifteen years though is the vaunted Blue List or Red List - oddly though - I can't seem to find anything on any search engine about it anymore? There used to be links on the subject and I'm sure there are still sites that speak of it but it definitely isn't as easy as it used to be too find them anymore. Now, I haven't looked in a while so I may be sticking my foot in my mouth and there now is a plethora of info on it. I may do some checking tonight on the subject.

Oh - I see now how you know that much about them. The only news I recently heard of the LDS was that Warren Jeffs {sp} fella, if that is who is really in charge of the mormons. Gotta say, he wasn't painted in too well of a light from the media...I know Dr.Phil was on his ass for a while...lol.

Warren Jeffs wasn't a real LDS. He was a "reformed" or "reorganized" Mormon.
The main body of the church does not believe as he does, and he was a constant thorn in their side. The main church threw off polygamy well over 100 years ago. Some of the offshoots are real nut cases, true cultists. Of course, most of mainstream Christianity views the entire LDS church as a cult.

That not the first time you have said that Dave "we get the gov't" etc. I don't deserve it and most others don't either. What I don't get with you is that here is Kevin, laying it out to the point that a good 5th/6th grader can understand it. I mean, I know that everything he just stated is really the truth, he didn't just make it up. I never got lower than a A in history and then later government classes, now granted that has been a long time ago but I get the gist of it.

But when I mention how bad things are IMO and how worse it's going to get IMO, you call me crazy. {?} Or you will say that "it isn't that bad" - like I'm just making this stuff up for sake of entertainment.
But then on another thread you will say it is bad? There has actually been one time where I checked your posting history to see if you were the same person...lol. I thought someone else was posting under Dave and now you basically called Kevin a clown, he has his faults like all of us do - but I think it's really stretching it to call him a clown or me crazy - though at times you make me crazy trying to see where you're coming from. ;-D

That is sooo cool Bruce, I see now that you had your bonkers about you in doing that/ saying what you said. I shouldn't have done what I did and won't do it again. ;-) The one that ripped through the Cincinnati Blue Ash area was categorized as an F4 if my memory serves me right, I could be wrong but I think that was it. I think I said this in my earlier post about it, but if it had been day time - I wouldn't have put myself in the bad spot I was in because I could have seen it but because it was nighttime I couldn't see anything. That wasn't too bright.

Ah man, I just looked at those - what a trip. I had bought at a Barnes store some years back a "weather book." It is the size (longer in length than in heighth) and makeup that you can keep it in your glove box or actually keep it in your back pocket if you're standing up. Light blue flexible soft cover and it shows the name of every cloud and what area that specific cloud is seen at....and what type of atmospheric conditions have to be present for that specific cloud and on and on. Then it has a seperate section on storms /tornados/ hurricanes/lightning etc. etc. and every cloud and storm described is accompanied by a killer color pic.

Just thought I would bring that up seeings how we're talking about the subject.:-) My weather manual has definitely gotten used more than the binder was made for and dollar for dollar - was one of the best purchases I ever made. Now if I can only find it...lol...I misplaced it a while back and haven't been able to find it. It isn't "lost" - just misplaced. ;-)

I never thought of them as a cult. Thanks for clearing up the Jeffs thing, I didn't know....I thought he was the Grand Poobah.
I do have to say when I heard and read about the Jeffs fella - he himself and that gathering of folks he had seemed cultish but I knew that wasn't the entire LDS movement - or at least that's what I thought or hoped.

IMHO - a real good radio for the BCB or listening to talk radio should be a radio that is strictly AM. I know - I know there are some extremely good receivers that have the SW and FM with the AM but in most cases there are taking 'something' away to have all three modes.
The only radio I would buy that had the AM and FM for talk radio would be one of the SR or if you can find a GE P-780 on Ebay, grab it. I can't count how many hundreds of hours where I have the GE on and listening to the Reds games or talk radio, it's fabulous for that.
Just my take.<ducking beer bottles>

That's a little nutso. I doubt Clinton gave a shit one way or the other. The Army was wrong to blink first. It's amazing how a handful of gun nuts, women and kids could hold the mighty USA at bay for a month.

They could've just set up a controlled perimeter and waited them out.

Oops - you say no analog and want presets, forget about my post then. Let us know what you decided but you may want to reconsider it "having to be" digital with presets, what's the big deal about turning the knob and having to have stations preset? I never understood that, especially for the BCB.

Everything since the Great Depression has been about oil.

Now, looking into the present and a possible connection to the NWO.
First of all as stated previously by 2080 the mormons are expected to have 260 million members, that's quite a force. Now take into effect the fact that these members are more or less brainwashed to follow the orders of their superiors without question as such orders are ordered by god. This obedience takes precedence over family and country. This is interesting as it was stated in an earlier thread that a large portion of the CIA, military establishment, and other organizations are comprised of mormons. Because many mormon men serve 2 year missions in foreign countries where they become fluent in other languages and cultures they are snatched up by these services. There is even a mormon doctrine albeit not a well known one that in the final days that the United States will begin to fall apart and it will be necessary for the church hierarchy to take over the country to prevent it from collapsing.

Another interesting point is that mormons are encouraged to store a large amount of food and water in case of emergency. I believe that the family I was involved with kept around 2 years worth of non-perishable food stored away. This is a concentrated effort that takes place at the local level where members get together to can dried goods. Also you have a virtual fortress as someone mentioned in the middle of Salt Lake City with its own power source, independent water sources for every level, under ground parking facilities, a structure that could withstand a lot of punishment, not to mention an enormous grain silo with millions of tons of grain nearby. So, if the mormons, almost completely unknowingly, were part of the NWO by 2080 you would have 260 million people spread throughout the world with enough resources to sustain themselves for 1-2 years independently of any outside help. These people are organized under a system of command with a prophet at the top and are willing to take commands from their superiors as the word of god. Not only that, if they have been following the words of wisdom they are in good shape and not dependant on any substance such as caffeine or nicotine. Finally, it is commonly taught by the mormons that these are the last days so they would be prepared to act under the assumption that they are participating in Armageddon. So basically to sum things up you would have a force of 260 million acting on command with idea where their orders are originating from so that they have plausible deniability. Not only would they be able to act with the fervor that religion brings, they are able to act independently of most if not all resource distribution structures our society depends on. If its not the case its quite a story.

When Reagan was president I started listening to Rush. Then Bill Cooper. I moved to Central Texas in 1992, actually met some Branch Davidians (through the music biz). I was on acid the windy morning that the compound burned, and had a strong hatred for the government. That vanished 2 years later.

I watched the government frozen by impeachment while KSM plotted. After 9-11 I saw the government use crisis to seize power. After the 2008 crash I saw the government use crisis to seize power. I really see these petty right/left squabbles as smoke and chaff, to cover-up the the thieves as they continue to take everything that is not bolted down.

The 1775 Revolution is just now ending. The Yankee Colonists lose after all. Long live the King.

I like radios with continuously variable tuning, or at least ones with 1 kHz or better resolution, so I can off-tune slightly for better intelligibility or interference mitigation.

My GE SRIII, bought from Ace Hardware is very good, but the tuning is so damn touchy! I listen at night to WPHT, great evening talk shows. I am in S. Florida, so use a Select-Tenna to weed out the Cubans who seem to infest every channel.
Also use a CCrane with the "twin ferrite" antenna, and several restored boatanchors, which are really the best for BCBDX!

That is what BCBDX is all about! Turning the knob to tune in that elusive station, while the old dial light shines on the bandspread! I still use my HQ-145XC and Lafayette HE-10, be surprised what the old radios can pull in on a dark night!

How to build your own Generator

If all you want is a small generator, you can use a small horizontal shaft (or vertical shaft engine) engine with a V belt and an alternator and inverter and one or two deep cycle 12 volt batteries.I have an old Popular Science magazine which has an article about how to use a walk behind lawn mower with a vertical shaft engine with a V belt drive out the grass discharge chute running a car alternator mounted on a home made bracket which is bolted to the lawn mower.Pawn shop lawn mowers and junk yard alternators are relatively cheap.

One immediate reason is that so when you switch between AM and FM, you don't have to retune. Though, I once bought a surplus AM/FM radio board that for some reason had a smaller front end board for FM and which was varactor tuned, so I had two tuning knobs, one for AM and one for FM, and when I switched bands, I'd be on whatever station I'd left it on before I last switched bands.

But, presets are also useful for listening to distant stations. I have a Delco digitally tuned car radio as my bedside radio. On FM, until local stations moved onto the frequencies, I had some presets set to not quite local stations. That made it really easy to see if that station in Vermont that came in sometimes was coming in, and if it was, then that might mean better radio conditions.

You can also keep one preset "free" and then as you tune the band and find an "odd" station, pop it into a preset and then keep tuning. That way, you don't have to stay on that frequency waiting for some ID, you can listen for other stations and come back.

I imagine if someone was listening to talk radio overnight, they might keep multiple stations in their presets that carry the same overnight show. That way if one had a lot of fading or another was blocked by some other station, you could just jump through the presets to find a suitable station with the program.

The old radios were lousy, not enough calibration marks (even when they were accurate) and usually no logging scale. That made it harder to get back to a station found when tuning up and down the band. Even something like the R390, with mechanical digital readout, it took so many turns of the knob (and maybe multiple turns of the band knob) to get back to some previous station that it just wasn't great for rapidly tuning the band. Today's digitally tuned receivers provide great precision in the frequency readout, and usually make it easier to pop around, not only is there a tuning knob (or up/down switches) but direct entry so you can enter a few numbers and instantly get back to the general area where you were previously tuning.

Digitially tuned radios are a vast improvement on the radios of the old days.

Michael

Well, I don't listen to Pimbaugh but I did listen/read Cooper. From what you just said it seems we have more in common when it comes to what's going on in this country than what I thought. Just trying to lead you down the right path Dave.;-)

No doubt, if I had too pick which receiver of mine to use to log some DX on the BCB - it would no doubt be my Hammarlund HQ 129X....but I doubt the OP is going in that direction. ;-)

Well, maybe they should be afraid of the commies. Does China own three

Not hard to imagine. It's just history repeating itself.

Back in 1890, Congress was on the Mormons for their polygamy and suddenly the church president had a vision in which the angel Moroni told him it was OK to cancel polygamy.

My, my...how convenient.

I am conflicted about Mormonism. To me and IMHO, it seems founded on fraud:

The Golden Plates, Urim and Thummim, icons of the foundation of the church...and all mysteriously (and dare I say), conveniently "lost".

Also, the the founder of the church said he was allowed to have sex with your wife.

Oooops, sorry, my mistake -- he said he was allowed to have sex with your wife AND with your daughter.

My conflict comes about because as you state below, they seem to have excellent family values.

So, therein lies the dichotomy...good people following a 'religion' that (IMHO) seems to be founded on fraud...by a dirty old man no less.

Why God wants them to wear burlap underwear I will leave for another discussion.

I know what you're saying and I can't disagree with any of it, it all depends if the OP uses those techniques. Myself, I have more than enough digital radios with presets if I wanted to employ what you're talking about. But for general AM talk radio listening my GE P-780 is more than suffice. If I wanted to listen and do what you're talking about - I'd use my DX398 or 394 that are modded out - or the 399 or the etc. etc. etc.

Best for "you" to stay away from "talk radio", and save what few brain cells you have left. As is attested to by asking about an AM radio on a shortwave newsgroup.

If you had a shortwave radio, you may hear broadcasts from other countries, with commentaries that don't fit into your belief system(?).
Oh, and get headphones, so that you can keep your head stuck in the sand, and not have to deal with reality.

And why do you hate America?

Well, it used to be so quiet here at my little hilltop in Greater London, but of late it seems every form of annoying noise has come to this little place.

We have Power line adaptors, courtesy of BT Vision
Grotty switch mose psus from China.
Plasma TVs warbling and fizzing all over the place and now a chuffing noise very like the old Woodpecker of old has come to roost between 13 and 23 mhz.

Makes you kind of wonder what the world is coming to. We have a regulator who has found the power line adaptors, but is stuck in the middle between two specifications, one saying its failing, while the other says its allowed by a special dispensation of EU law.

We have the lunatics in charge of the asylum in that manufacturers can type approve their own products.

Blimey.

Brian -

The same thing is happening here in the U.S.

Our Government is absolutely out-of-control and corruption is rampant. The U.S. Federal Government protects big business interests and the common citizen is no longer represented. He's essentially on his own. And it gets worse with every election.

The FCC could care less about noise emitting devices here in the states. Sad but true.

NO modifications.
I use an outboard antenna tuner a "Gilfer BCL Antenna Coupler Model

On my FRG-7 which is marked as a SEARS COMMUNICATION RECEIVER, (Yeasu just put SEARS marking and a "Death Star logo on a stock FRG-7), the

And yet, in December of 1921, when Paul Godley went over to England to receive US stations during the Transatlantic Test (the one that showed that shortwave was useable, amateurs having been "exiled" to "200 metres and down" because nobody believe those frequencies were useful), he originally set up in London, only to move to a more rural location because reception in London was awful. Too much interference, both man made and natural.

What's really happening now is that there is so much stuff. Even forty years ago, the average household had a tv set or two, a radio or two, and maybe a stereo of some sort. (And it drops off even more the further back you go.) Now, every household is loaded with electronic equipment, computers, VCRs, digital clocks, microwave ovens, and on and on. It's not so much that any one item is "noisy", it's that there is a collective noise created by all that mass of electronic equipment. It also creates a density issue, the noise generated by such equipment is often quite low, but if you've got a good receiver next to one, it will cause interference. Move the offending item a bit away from the receiver, and the interference drops off fast, indicating it isn't a strong "noise". But the more stuff you have in a room, the harder it is to get away from any of the units. If I move a couple of feet away from this computer and monitor, that moves me within a couple of feet of my DVD recorder and VCR.

Yes, some of it is noisier than it should, and obviously all of it is often too noisy for good reception. But likely for much of the equipment, reasonable steps have been made to quiet things down, and it would take a whole lot more effort and money to make it even quieter.

And then you'd be stuck with the reality that the neighbors have their own collection of electronic equipment that generates noise too.

I'm going to make a point sometime this week to see if the Ace around here has the SR and maybe pick one up. Sometimes it's hard for me to get past the way these radios are put together. I remember when I was going to pu the RS that touted that piece as a "long distance" radio.
The knobs and switches were loose and there was just no heft to the piece for its size. There's no way that particular radio would have held up to all the hours I would have used it IMO.

I wouldn't be surprised.

Our politicians seem to be in love with them. I think they'd love to set up an equivalent system here.

You know the scenario...Business runs the government and the government keeps the work force nice, stable and cheap.

The Canadian government still gives foreign aid money to the communists.
It is truly obscene.

I was under the impression that the US still gives them money too.

It isn't aid at all, it's pure extortion by the commies to ensure continued foreign access to almost free labour and no pollution restraints.

Hey Michael, I'll just add that I don't really feel the same way as you when you say "the old radios were lousy" or even your last sentence. Though no doubt, there are pluses to the digital radios - if it's really that big a deal - you can take care of that - not the presets of course but having a digital next to you if it's that big a deal to check the bands would suffice.

The only draw back IMO to my HQ129X was the lack of a digital readout. I took care of that by having one added on and that was solved. IMO much of having a specific receiver is how much skill you have in your particular piece. I got to use the R75 for a little bit with a friend, I had never used one before and he had never used the 129X with the added on Q Multiplier...this was before I had the freq counter added on.

There was nothing he heard on his piece (different antenna) that I couldn't hear and even he said he liked the audio better on the Hammarlund. There were two BCB stations though, don't remember what they were specifically but one was on the most eastern part of Oklahoma that he couldn't pickup on his receiver that I could on mine. How much of it was that he only had been in the hobby for maybe a year and a half and had the Icom for 6-7 months? I don't know. I just wanted to see if the noise floor on that particular piece was lower than mine, unfortunately I didn't get to test drive it to find out.

In closing, I really think it helps if you have your receiver mastered, and I do with my Hammarlunds - specifically the 129X.

That was a funny post. I didn't know anything about what you stated. I guess when you got to the part of their leader being able to tap BOTH the wife and daughter....I then came to my conclusion. I think it sounds like with most denominations, that there are/were good points and then someone came/comes along and in his point to fullfill HIS fantasies or other crackpot beliefs - that he screwed it up.

Here is a tip if you are going to smoke. Don't buy the store bought cigs that are already rolled.

I really believe that it isn't the tobacco itself (most of the time) that kills folks, it's the poisons they spray on the tobacco and the stuff to make it burn faster so you will smoke more....now they have added another chemical so if you don't puff within a minute your cig goes out - all along leaving in the 'other' chemical to make it burn faster. Makes sense huh?

Roll your own - most of the tobacco you buy in the tub or small packs don't have near the same amount of crap as do the name cig companies. Buy you a roller or a machine and buy your own filters/papers, you'll be able too tell the difference....if you can get through the first week too two of headaches from the detoxing of the crap that spray...you'll be home free and safe lots of cash in the process.

I think that they are now re-branded RCA,but still the same radio. It is still pretty solid, not a lightweight. The varactor tuning knob is very touchy however. The Select-Tenna really helps null out the noise and the interference, in addition to the ferrite rod in the radio. BTW, I picked up an old Knight Star Roamer with a wound loop in the back of the radio. With some tweaking of the controls, it is a good BCBDXer! Four tubes and a selenium resistor. It was restored by a friend of mine who specializes in old radios. I am getting overrun with old radios around here! My really great AM DXer is my Panasonic RF-2200 with the swiveling ferrite rod, can't beat that baby! Got it at Keesler AFB when I was stationed there in the '80s.

Yeah, I smoked for eight/nine years. I was never really a heavy smoker, the last couple of years that I smoked - I smoked anywhere from four to nine a day....never wanted to get into double digits - pretty weird huh? I just quit all together. Even when I did smoke though, after the first couple of years, I switched to buying my own tobacco/filters and papers....there was no way I was going to spend that much money on a lousy pack of smokes.

Gregg, I couldn't have said it better myself! Digital is nice with all the bells and whistles, but I'm sure even John Plimmer would say that it is the antenna and the operator that make up over 90% of the listening and DX'ing! Are you in OK? I am originally from OKC, mother, brother, daughter(and now granddaughter) son and step-father live in Midwest City. Oh, the days in my old room with that Sears bought S-120!

I think that there are items that are known to be a problem. Power line adaptors that shove broadband signals down the mains to save the user running a couple of wires are the worst thing, as although they have notches at the ham band frequencies, they do not for most of the rest. They do bty their mere design, send rf signals down the mains supply. However although this contravenes the british electromagnetic interference specs, the EU directive that allows these devices gives them a waiver.
The switch mode supplies for things like laptops, mobile phone chargers and small domestinc devices like answering machines, ar often made in china, and many have no parts inside to snuff out the spikes they send down the mains wiring. They probably did at the start, hbut the Chinese are always looking for cheap ways to do things, and who ever opens the devices after the first run is made?

Plasma tvs use some form aof hf pulsing of the cells or pixels to counteract the pulsating effects at low brightness they are often known for in early samples, and this shoves out huge amounts of wide band noise.

The problem of course is that the devices to null out what used to be a single source no longer really work when the transmission is coming from mains wiring in an adjacent house.

Who are these AM pirates. Most seem to be Dutchmen as far as I can tell, playing music from their own country, but every now and then you get something you recognise.

Sometimes they speak English and explain something about their aerial or somesuch, but is this some kind of tradition or what?

There used to be UK ones at one time.

LOL - great post - I sense your excitement with this stupid outlandish hobby.:-) I've always heard of the Knight Star but have never had the priviledge to take it for a drive.

What radios do you have? Also, what state are you in if you don't mind me asking. I've seen many a pics and writeups on your Panasonic, definitely a Cadillac from what I gather. When is enough - enough in having too many radios...lol.

Born and bred in Cincinnati,Ohio. Oklahoma, specifically the most eastern part was a station I was logging. I can't remember the specific station because I couldn't get a top of the hour ID, but it was a lower powered AM station - it was one of those that "got away"- I had some old notes on the lowered powered midwest stations at one time. They were talking about something going on in Stilwell and later on mentioned a place called Sallisaw so I looked up those areas and figured it out. Maybe one day she'll magically appear again.

I've drove through there (Okl.) before, beautiful state and ever nicer people is what I came away with.

I see it a little differently, 40% of the households actually get money back from the federal government rather than paying any federal tax. *50% don't pay federal taxes.

So it seems 50 % have voted in representation that will give them the earnings of the other 50 %. I think that is a tipping point.
In such a wealthy country it is wrong for this to happen. It is simply vote buying with taxpayers dollars.
I do agree "Our Government is absolutely out-of-control" they are trying to regulate everything.
The environmentalists have a stranglehold on almost every economic endeavour which limits production of jobs.
And regarding business, businesses don't pay tax, purchasers of their products pay the taxes of the corporation. When you buy a car, a hamburger or a roll of toilet paper the taxes that the corporation pay are added to the cost of that product. That's the only way it can be. When the government taxes business it is just a way to hide from you the money they extract from your wallet.

* don't start in with "but they pay payroll taxes. They pay SS which is a disability/retirement program,
Do you think I should pay for their retirement too!
They also pay Medicare, Do you think I should pay for their Medicare during retirement!
Most of these people if checked would have cable tv, a computer, internet access, a cellphone.
They would have a car of newer vintage than the one I own (97).

Crap, I just called the nearest Ace Hardware to me and the guy checked and said all they carry is an AM/FM clock radio and a Coby. He asked why I thought they carried that specific radio and I explained it to him and he said he could order it....lol...I thought "well I can order it also."

I have a feeling it's going to take me just driving around specific stores and looking for myself. I want to actually have it in front of me and check everything out before I buy it. Who knows, maybe check out a couple thrift stores that happen to be close to that Ace and see.

Ya gotta laugh. Why are you blaming the Chinese? They didn't sell it to you. That was done by a Canadian who knows there's a sucker born every minute. And as for the yank complaining about the Chinese owning 3/4 of America, well who the hell sold it to them. And that after decades of complaining about those dirty commie unionists. Ya know the worst of it is, that after the yanks begged the Chinese to take over America's manufacturing so the yanks could have cheap consumer goods, they sold the Chinese all their machine tools as scrap. But then the best part of the joke is, that to keep the oil pipe line from Uzbekistan open through Afghanistan, not to mention just keeping their economy afloat, the yanks borrow millions from China to pay the troops.

Did someone mention a sucker being born every minute? You wanted cheap? You got it.

OK, this is getting cornfusing so I bring it to the tribal committee.

Apparently Amazon doesn't even sell this anymore - or out of stock.

But what I'm finding is the RCA/GE SR3 is modestly priced, correct?
Model number 7-2887 - this is the one a few of us have been speaking about.

What I am seeing is that there is also a RCA RP7887 AM/FM Super Portable Radio that costs $149.99 - - - What's up with that? It looks somewhat smaller and compact but it didn't have the feature to enlarge the pic so I couldn't tell if the controls were in the same place as the SR3

I can't remember anyone mentioning this specific radio in here before, is this somewhat new and shame on you all for no one speaking of or doing a review on it before anyone else spent their own money. ;-)

That radio is exactly the same as the GE SRIII.. and can be bought for under $50 new from any number of online sites.

No, it really doesn't make sense.

Smoking, with or without the "added poisons" that may (or may not) be there, is absolutely horrible for the human body. Nicotine itself is a deadly poison. The many byproducts of combustion are equally deadly to the human body.

> Roll your own - most of the tobacco you buy in the tub or small packs

And you know this how? Might it be possible that the small roll-your-own companies buy their tobacco from the big producers?

Have you considered that the roll-your-own companies may want their product to also burn faster so they can sell you more, just like the big boys do?

Bottom line: the roll-your-owns will kill you just as dead as the name-brands.

Um, I fully realize that and that's why I was complaining about it. It is GREED, run rampant. So, to clarify it for you, I'm not complaining that the Chinese own us per se, but rather my anger is directed towards the greedy, stupid, short-sighted bastards that sold us out.

Well, if that comment was directed towards me, you are sadly and wildly off the mark.

Although as with all pendulums, sometimes unions have gone too far, but generally I am pro-union. -Something- is needed to try and counterbalance the run amok greed of management.

Oh really? They threw me with the different model numbers and when I

After ten thousand threats, Mr. Davies finally dropped offa the boards, closed his blog and disappeared about 5 years ago.

But a lot of the old radios were lousy. Yes, if you spent a lot of money you got good radios, but a lot of people were using low end radios. When I got a Hallicrafters S-120A in the summer of 1971, I couldn't afford anything better, not only was it lousy in terms of reception (completely lacking in sensitivity, it overloaded too much, couldn't receive SSB because the BFO was too weak, horrible backlash on the tuning, and on and on), but for calibration it was like "well, the pointer [which was terribly wide anyway) is closer to the 10.5MHz mark than the 10MHz mark, and even then it might not have been on 10MHz when the pointer was on that mark.

A lot of people had that level of radio, you just have to look at the pictures in the old magazines.

Even when I got an SP-600 a year later, that was still fairly vague in the resolution department, though it had a good logging scale and no blacklash on the tuning so I could have built up a tuning scale built on that logging scale.

Except that some analog tuning shortwave receivers are creeping in, like the S350, you can get digital tuning at all price levels. The radios behind those digital dials may still be lousy, but at least you can tune in the strong signals, just like that S-120 from almost forty years ago, but now you know what frequency you are tuned to.

An important consideration is that the circuitry is now cheap, and it's easier to automatically solder in extra components than it is to calibrate a dial, especially when those analog radios would all be mildly different so all had to be adjusted to match the dial. Hand calibrating/adjustment is costly, the extra parts for digital tuning isn't. Likewise, a ceramic filter is cheap in large quantities, and does away with multiple IF transformers, and the need to align them. Sometimes complicating a design makes things easier to produce.

For AM broadcast band DXing, any old table radio was a good start, they were sensitive enough. But they all had lousy dials, leaving that same issue I previously explained, not being sure where you are, having problems getting back to that previous frequency.

The Delco digitally tuned car radio I use by the bed has the best FM reception I've seen (admittedly limited to what I've actually tried). Good sensitivity, good selectivity, and virtually no overload. And yes, if it hadn't been digitally tuned, I likely wouldn't have heard that Mississippi station some years back here in Montreal, because I wouldn't have automatically tried the not quite local station in the preset and found reception exceptional, so I tuned the band and found that Mississippi station and some others not so distant. And it was gone almost as soon as it began. You want digital tuning and presets under those circumstances, because you don't have the time to tune up and down the dial.

Michael

Dear Gregg,

I own seven examples of the entire GE/RCA 'Superadio' series. ALL were purchased new. The first model, the 7-2880A, came in two forms: the first one without battery straps and no antenna connection screws and the second model, the 7-2880B, came with both. The build quality of these two models was fine (the A being the better of the two) as was (is) their reception and sound quality. (On the A model, the one without the battery straps, the six D batteries would fall out easily and quite frequently any time you opened the compartment to retrieve, for example, the AC line cord; the B model corrected that.)

The second model, the first to be actually named 'Superadio,' was the 7-2885 and it came in various letter series depending, I suppose, on its production run (that is a guess on my part - I do not actually know why the letter suffixes changed); I own one 7-2885D and two 7-2885F models. While the sound quality, especially in the treble range, was improved over that of the first model (noticeable, of course, primarily with FM reception), and the reception quality was very slightly improved, the build quality took a distressing dip. On one of my units (the 'D' model), AM reception and, to a lesser extent, FM reception is poor; I did not notice this until well after the warranty had expired and I did a side-by-side comparison with a subsequently purchased 'F' model. But that "better-receiving" 'F' model had horrible wobble in its knobs and the antenna retaining clip almost immediately broke off (and for no apparent reason!). The third 'Superadio II,' also an 'F' model, still in use, in built slightly - only slightly - better than my first 'F' model (and the 'D' one), but it is not to be compared in quality to the original 7-2880A or B.

Later, in the early '90s, I bought a 'Superadio III,' Model 7-2887; I tried it only once and then packed it away in its box, where is remains, on the off-chance I may need it someday. I do not know what, if any, letter suffix is present in the model number. On its very brief trial (I just wanted to make sure it worked!), it seemed to be okay but was certainly nothing special. Its styling, of course, is very different from the 'Superadio I' (the commonly-used name nowadays) and the 'Superadio II.'

Now to the RCA 'Superadio' Model RP7887A. First, I recommend that you do NOT - repeat NOT - buy one.

Let me explain.

I saw that this radio had been re-branded and I thought that, as I had example of all the previous models, I should buy one of these too. So

I put it in my Amazon wish list and began watching its price and availability. At first it was selling in the $40.00 range and then it went into the $50.00 range, much more than I wanted to spend for this radio (which I figured would get little use).

But one day early this year, as I was perusing my wish list, lo and behold, it was being offered for $20.66! I immediately ordered it (along with something else to bring the total to more than $25.00, thus qualifying for free shipping) - AND I immediately posted a notice on this group of the price (which, as it turned out, lasted only the one day) and the link to the radio for anyone who wanted one.

A week or so later the radio arrived - and it was defective. (There was a loud howling noise all across the AM band and, obviously, reception of even slightly weaker local stations was impossible.) As I had ordered it from Amazon, I contacted them and immediately received a free return shipping label and I returned it the next day, asking for a replacement.

The replacement arrived several days later - and it too was defective. (FM reception was non-existent.) Another contact with Amazon, another free return label, and back it went.

This time they the replacement came two-day shipping. This sample has the power button askew - VERY noticeably - but the power button does work and the radio functions normally.

At $20.66, it is an "okay" buy - but I wouldn't spend one cent more and I'll tell you why. Last night (and this is only the most recent example), I wanted to listen to Bloomberg Business Radio (WBBR 1130 kHz), a station located about 100 miles from my location. Normally it comes in well at night but last night, of course, it didn't.

It was EXTREMELY difficult to find the station using the 'Superadio's' rubbery tuning knob (that's not the feel of the knob, but the way it tunes in stations - it is very difficult to tune the station in accurately; you must go back and forth many times to tune in properly - it has a rubbery feeling to the tuning) and, when I finally did, the selective-fading distortion was extreme. So I quickly put the radio down and pulled out one of my Sony ICF-SW7600GRs and tuned it to 1130.

Obviously, with a digital tuner, it is no problem to find the station you desire, something quite difficult on any analog radio and especially this one (its dial markings are almost worthless). Not only was the station received with the same apparent strength as on the 'Superadio,' when I activated the sync, the selective-fading distortion completely disappeared.

Of course the Sony doesn't produce near the mellow (very fine) sound quality the 'Superadio' does - but what good is sound quality if you can't quickly find the station you want and then, when you do, can't understand what is being said?

I wanted a "complete" collection of this radio; I have it - but, unless you also wish to "collect" this model, I recommend that you avoid it (UNLESS Amazon offers it again for $20.00 or so - put it in your wish list and check daily). The radio I would recommend is the new CCRadio 2; I do not have one of these (nor am I going to buy one) but I DO own an original CCRadio. I bought it in 2003 and it is in daily use (mostly by my wife). While its build quality is nothing to write home about, its sound, at least on AM, is fine and, being digitally tuned, stations are easy to find. And the dreaded LCD "problem" has never manifested itself on our sample.

If $150.00 is too much for you, I recommend that you investigate some lower-priced shortwave radios such as the Kaito KA-1103 to see if it would satisfy you. Even though the Sony ICF-SW7600GR is priced approximately the same as the CCRadio, its versatility - and that sync circuit which works on AM as long as your station is not adjacent to an AM IBOC station (and, fortunately, they're becoming fewer and fewer) - makes it a superior radio in all but sound quality. And even that can be "improved" by use of external computer speakers connected to the Sony's line output jack.

In conclusion, I feel that you, as well as anyone else who buys the RCA RP7887A 'Superadio,' will be disappointed in it. Why do I continue to use mine from time-to-time? Because I'm too lazy to go into my crawl space, retrieve the box, and pack the d--- thing away! That's why!

$20.00 or so? Sure. Any more, NO!

That's my opinion, anyway.

Best,

Joe

Well, I monitored CRI on its 9690 Spain relay 0300-0400z three nights running (4/24, 4/25 and 4/26), and the propagation definitely improved on the latter two nights compared to the first night. On the 24th it was quite touch and go on getting good copy; by the 25th much better, virtually 100%, and last night was cake. Given the high-midlatitude path the signal takes, not surprised that it got bonked the first evening by the storm, even a little G1.

So, death to geomagnetic storms! ;-)

Liberty Net for Week of April 24 ï¿½ May 1

http://3950.net/2010/04/liberty-net-for-week-of-april-24-may-1/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THIS WEEK a computer crash caused N2IRJï¿½s recording to be lost ï¿½ but we do have a partial recording from an online receiver, so some of this weekï¿½s Liberty Net (recorded 4/24) can still be heard. The Liberty Net is amateur radioï¿½s premiere and longest-running discussion net, on the air since 1974. The Net Control Station is published author and antenna innovator Victor Misek, W1WCR.

It was good to note the return of Vern, W9FAM, a broadcast station owner and talk show host in his own right, whoï¿½s been covering politics since he sat in on town hall meetings run by Obama predecessor and role model Franklin Roosevelt. Vern has been absent from the Net for several years. He puts in an excellent, high-quality signal.

There was also a spirited debate on the Net regarding the Constitutionality of Arizonaï¿½s new law empowering police to question people on their immigration status: There was general agreement that the massive invasion from Mexico ought to be stopped, but disagreement on whether it is better to allow police to stop suspects on the streets, or instead transfer all our troops now participating in illegal Mideast wars onto our southern border.

Here are some highlights from this weekï¿½s Net:

ï¿½ Securities and Exchange Commission personnel were apparently downloading and viewing pornography on a colossal scale ï¿½ colossal in terms of the number of people doing it, and colossal in terms of literally filling the hard drives of the taxpayer-funded computers. (5 minutes)

ï¿½ Why do people mindlessly support the government, even when it commits outrageous crimes and murders? Have the government killers at Waco or Ruby Ridge ever spent a day in jail or paid a dollar in fines? ï¿½ for only two examples. (7 minutes)

ï¿½ 27 trillion dollars for the bankers? This is the result of blind allegiance to government ï¿½ and that blind allegiance leads to the most corrupt possible government. (8 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the low state of America partially due to the fact that the 1960s generation ï¿½ the first to be baby-sat for its entire childhood

by television ï¿½ is now essentially in charge? (11 minutes)

ï¿½ With the large numbers of illegal aliens in jail, there must be absolutely huge numbers in our communities, feral and uncounted. Arizona has reacted, since the Washington regime will do nothing to stop the problem. (13 minutes)

ï¿½ It is indeed a strange phenomenon that the alleged ï¿½socialistï¿½ and pro-ï¿½changeï¿½ president is pumping huge amounts of money directly into Wall Street ï¿½ who in turn are funding him. (17 minutes)

ï¿½ What is the significance of George Sorosï¿½ ï¿½ who has fomented revolutions around the world and made billions by raiding the currencies of many nations ï¿½ funding of Obama? (19 minutes)

ï¿½ Once White Americans become a minority, the damage caused by mass immigration will be irreversible by conventional political means. (23 minutes)

All the Liberty Net recordings on http://3950.net/ are available for free download and listening on your iPod or other mp3 player ï¿½ and you can listen and chat live while the Net is on the air via the streaming feeds set up by N2SAG and N2IRJ. Spread the word and, if you can, join in!

I own one of the first models, it doesn't say Superadio anywhere on the radio.I bought it new at a Service Merchandise store.Model number is, 7-2880B
It does have external screws connections on the back of the radio for external antenna.FM GND and AM, there is a battery compartment too.On the dial it says LONG RANGE HIGH SELECTIVITY.On the speaker grill (it has one speaker) it says GENERAL ELECTRIC with the GE logo in the middle of GENERAL ELECTRIC.The radio still works real good.The radio was made in HONG KONG.A few years after I bought the radio the ON/OFF push button on top of the radio quit working.I replaced it with a toggle switch.

Actually it was in response to m ll.
But the answer remains that you were willing to buy a Chinese generator to save money.

There are two kinds of product that come out of China. 1) Chinese copies of real machinery and 2) machinery that is made to spec for western companies. If it doesn't have a good pedigree, i.e. made to spec for a reputable manufacturer it is strictly buyer beware.

Yeah, thanks Bruce but it wasn't really that big a deal for me. I didn't really smoke out of habit, though that may sound like bullcrap, but it really wasn't for me. I'd take a puff for the energy boost and believe it or not...but to calm down at times - kind of sounds nuts in a way. You know when you go to a new doctor or he asks you questions to update your file? When I would say I usually smoke four cigs a day or go three or four days without smoking I'd get the look like I was lying or something <shrug> When I quit I didn't even have any withdrawal that I know. But I DID have withdrawal (terrible headaches) for maybe a week when I switched going from the treated tobacco to the roll your own kind that isn't treated near like the others are. Man, I think I'm jonesing for a cigarette now. ;-)

Michael

I have a car radio that use as my bedside radio too. I did it mostly for the presets, much easier in the middle of the night to just push a button, then to turn a knob. I use a pillow speaker and just recently I added a volume control on the pillow speaker so I don't need to roll over to adust volume.
BTW, what do you use for your antenna on your car radio? I just used a regular car antenna, but would like to get a better AM antenna outdoors. This brings up several problems as the input is both AM and FM. Any idea about impedance matching for the antenna input on a car radio?
Mike

I still have my Icom R-71a which I'll use occasionally

Which is why I like "Harbor Freight". A good quality US built wrench, for example, might cost $25. But if you're only going to use it once every two years, then a $5 copy is good enough.

Harbor Freight has that $5 wrnech for... five dollars.

Other places will sell it for $20.

So as long as you realize it's just a cheapo and treat it that way, you're fine.

China's economy is growing beyond all bounds; the US economy, at least for regular people, is stagnant. Buy Chinese, and you condemn the US economy to more of the same.

Nope, still not quite right. I [Joe from Kokomo] was NOT buying the Chinese generator. That was mII.

Good deal Justis, I wouldn't have thought of WalMart - that would sure save me time/fuel driving around looking for a thirty/fourty dollar radio. I know I can make it up there this week some time to check it out. I haven't been in a WalMart in ages.

OK Joe, I've always respected your posts and opinions and on this specific piece (in this group) you qualify IMO as knowing about this line of radio. I don't monitor Amazon, I think I've only been on that site no more than ten times counting today and I'm not going to start just for this radio.

If I see one at a thrift store I may consider it (hopefully it'll be the 1 or 2 like BA and Ace have) I won't make the special trip to WalMart but the next time I'm up there (which will probably be once a year) I'll visually check it out.

I don't really need another radio for the BCB and I don't do music so that's out the window, I just wanted to set it side by side with my GE P-780 and have a "shootout." I've heard all the different comparisons between the two radios and read enough about each of them. I think Brenda Ann told me once that the SR1/2 would give my 780 a run or I forget how she phrased it and I no doubt respect BA's take on those pieces because she has at one time or another owned them all and she hooked me up with my two 780's.

But I think where one may live also has a bearing on what you can/ can't hear. I'm extremely fortunate living out where I do RF wise. I wanted to test each one side by side barefoot / and then with a random length of wire / and with a couple of my loops and see which one was pound for pound the middle weight champion.:-)

Here shortly I'm going to connect my P-780 to my A/D DX sloper - that'll be a kick to hear what she picks up with that badass antenna up as high as it is - I'm really curious as to hear what it sounds like and picks up and if it'll overload - I don't think it will.

Thanks for your post, I definitely appreciate it. :O)

I remember you talking about that radio before. If Joe or BA can pipe in on this. Does Cuh have the same radio I have? The GE P-780? Mine doesn't have GE anywhere on it either, it just says on the grill
"Eight Transistors" with the word eight in cursive and transistors is printed. I also have the screws on the back for the ground and external antenna, I've read on that fantastic site of the P-780 where they interview Conrad Jutson {sp} who made/engineered the radio that it was the first of the line of SR before there was even the term
"Superadio."

The other 780 I have doesn't have the screws on the back and I think it says "Long Distance".... or something is different in the writing on the grill- it's in my closet and I'm not going to move everything around to check. Anyone? Bueller? Bueller? :-)

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Waco_Siege Prelude
On July 30, 1992, ATF agents David Aguilera and Skinner visited the Davidian's gun dealer Henry McMahon, who tried to get them to talk with Koresh on the phone. Koresh offered to let ATF inspect the Davidians' weapons and paperwork and asked to speak with Aguilera, but Aguilera declined.[16][17] Sheriff Harwell told reporters regarding law enforcement talking with Koresh, "Just go out and talk to them, what's wrong with notifying them?"[18] . . .

. . . Economist and crisis consultant Randall Bell writes in his book Strategy 360, "Koresh was on amicable terms with the local sheriff. He could have been easily arrested or questioned during one of his frequent visits to town. Many people believe that, even if a simple phone call had been allowed between the sheriff and Koresh, the FBI's raid might not have occurred at all."[27]

The Davidian members were well known locally and had cordial relations with other locals. The Davidians partly supported themselves by trading at gun shows and took care always to have the relevant paperwork to ensure their transactions were legal.[28] Davidian Paul Fatta was a federal firearms licensed dealer (FFL) and the Davidians operated a retail gun business called the Mag Bag. When shipments for the Mag Bag arrived, they were signed for by Fatta, Steve Schneider or Koresh. The morning of the raid, Paul Fatta and son Kalani were on their way to the Austin, Texas gun show to conduct business.[29]

I'm no expert on such matters but it sounds as if BATF wanted to humiliate the Davidians with a show of force. It sounds similar to the use of overpowering force at Ruby Ridge, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ruby_Ridge>

the bombing of the Move Organization in Philadelphia, 1985 bombing
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/MOVE the murder of Fred Hampton by the Chicago Police Dept. and the FBI, and the refusal of the Los Angeles PD to take prisoners at the SLA shoot out.
Move to Los Angeles and police shootout http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Symbionese_Liberation_Army#Move_to_Los_Angel es_and_police_shootout
This article varies from what was stated in the local papers at the time.
Then, there was no mention of anyone coming out of the house with weapons.

Like I say, I'm no expert on these matters, but if you get a thump on your door a 3 AM, and you are given the option to comply, do it quickly.

Sorry to crash in on you guys. I came with one thing in mind and have found another.

Is there anything in particular that I should look for in a s-w radio, in order to tune in France and Germany?

I used to be able to get Germany at night with a s-w radio that I used to have, and I would like to try again.

I'm doing this to try to strengthen language skills. Does anyone know if any news broadcasts are aimed at America in French or German that may use a simplified vocabulary?

Thank you.

Good deal Justis, I wouldn't have thought of WalMart - that would sure save me time/fuel driving around looking for a thirty/fourty dollar radio. I know I can make it up there this week some time to check it out. I haven't been in a WalMart in ages.

It is for those of you with selective memories.
http://www.c-span.org/resources/pdf/hjres114.pdf
* Iraq's noncompliance with the conditions of the 1991 cease fire, including interference with weapons inspectors.
* Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction, and programs to develop such weapons, posed a "threat to the national security of the United States and international peace and security in the Persian Gulf region."
* Iraq's "brutal repression of its civilian population."
* Iraq's "capability and willingness to use weapons of mass destruction against other nations and its own people".
* Iraq's hostility towards the United States as demonstrated by the alleged 1993 assassination attempt of former President George H.
W. Bush, and firing on coalition aircraft enforcing the no-fly zones following the 1991 Gulf War.
* Members of al-Qaeda, an organization bearing responsibility for attacks on the United States, its citizens, and interests, including the attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, are known to be in Iraq.
* Iraq's "continu[ing] to aid and harbor other international terrorist organizations," including anti-United States terrorist organizations.
* The efforts by the Congress and the President to fight terrorists, including the September 11th, 2001 terrorists and those who aided or harbored them.
* The authorization by the Constitution and the Congress for the President to fight anti-United States terrorism.
* Citing the Iraq Liberation Act of 1998, the resolution reiterated that it should be the policy of the United States to remove the Saddam Hussein regime and promote a democratic replacement.

And the left's selective memory doesn't stop there.
Clinton only responsible for the deaths of the Branch Davidians and no one else eh?

Guess his random bombings to enforce the same UN resolutions that are given above don't count?
Or the 100,000 plus deaths resulting from the mass bombing of the Balkins?

Or the loss of the military lives in the farce in Somalia?
Or the bombing of innocent civilian targets by the Clinton administration based upon faulty intel? He must have been lying as well at the time based upon your logic.

I still don't understand,,, just what is supposed to be so special about the General Electric Superadios? Because of the antenna? speaker sound? Circuitry? What?
I have a lot of old, old, old strictly AM radios (tube type and transistors) which pull in long distance AM radio stations as good or better than my General Electric 7-2880B radio.

OK Joe, I've always respected your posts and opinions and on this specific piece (in this group) you qualify IMO as knowing about this line of radio. I don't monitor Amazon, I think I've only been on that site no more than ten times counting today and I'm not going to start just for this radio.

If I see one at a thrift store I may consider it (hopefully it'll be the 1 or 2 like BA and Ace have) I won't make the special trip to WalMart but the next time I'm up there (which will probably be once a year) I'll visually check it out.

I don't really need another radio for the BCB and I don't do music so that's out the window, I just wanted to set it side by side with my GE P-780 and have a "shootout." I've heard all the different comparisons between the two radios and read enough about each of them. I think Brenda Ann told me once that the SR1/2 would give my 780 a run or I forget how she phrased it and I no doubt respect BA's take on those pieces because she has at one time or another owned them all and she hooked me up with my two 780's.

But I think where one may live also has a bearing on what you can/ can't hear. I'm extremely fortunate living out where I do RF wise. I wanted to test each one side by side barefoot / and then with a random length of wire / and with a couple of my loops and see which one was pound for pound the middle weight champion.:-)

Here shortly I'm going to connect my P-780 to my A/D DX sloper - that'll be a kick to hear what she picks up with that badass antenna up as high as it is - I'm really curious as to hear what it sounds like and picks up and if it'll overload - I don't think it will.

Thanks for your post, I definitely appreciate it. :O)

The Real Culprits In This Meltdown

By INVESTOR'S BUSINESS DAILY | Posted Monday, September 15, 2008 4:20 PM PT

Big Government: Barack Obama and Democrats blame the historic financial turmoil on the market. But if it's dysfunctional, Democrats during the Clinton years are a prime reason for it.

Obama in a statement yesterday blamed the shocking new round of subprime-related bankruptcies on the free-market system, and specifically the "trickle-down" economics of the Bush administration, which he tried to gig opponent John McCain for wanting to extend.

But it was the Clinton administration, obsessed with multiculturalism, that dictated where mortgage lenders could lend, and originally helped create the market for the high-risk subprime loans now infecting like a retrovirus the balance sheets of many of Wall Street's most revered institutions.

Tough new regulations forced lenders into high-risk areas where they had no choice but to lower lending standards to make the loans that sound business practices had previously guarded against making. It was either that or face stiff government penalties.

The untold story in this whole national crisis is that President Clinton put on steroids the Community Redevelopment Act, a well-intended Carter-era law designed to encourage minority homeownership. And in so doing, he helped create the market for the risky subprime loans that he and Democrats now decry as not only greedy but "predatory."

Yes, the market was fueled by greed and overleveraging in the secondary market for subprimes, vis-a-vis mortgaged-backed securities traded on Wall Street. But the seed was planted in the '90s by Clinton and his social engineers. They were the political catalyst behind this slow-motion financial train wreck.

And it was the Clinton administration that mismanaged the quasi-governmental agencies that over the decades have come to manage the real estate market in America.

As soon as Clinton crony Franklin Delano Raines took the helm in 1999 at Fannie Mae, for example, he used it as his personal piggy bank, looting it for a total of almost $100 million in compensation by the time he left in early 2005 under an ethical cloud.

Other Clinton cronies, including Janet Reno aide Jamie Gorelick, padded their pockets to the tune of another $75 million.

Raines was accused of overstating earnings and shifting losses so he and other senior executives could earn big bonuses.

In the end, Fannie had to pay a record $400 million civil fine for SEC and other violations, while also agreeing as part of a settlement to make changes in its accounting procedures and ways of managing risk.

But it was too little, too late. Raines had reportedly steered Fannie Mae business to subprime giant Countrywide Financial, which was saved from bankruptcy by Bank of America.

At the same time, the Clinton administration was pushing Fannie and her brother Freddie Mac to buy more mortgages from low-income households.

The Clinton-era corruption, combined with unprecedented catering to affordable-housing lobbyists, resulted in today's nationalization of both Fannie and Freddie, a move that is expected to cost taxpayers tens of billions of dollars.

And the worst is far from over. By the time it is, we'll all be paying for Clinton's social experiment, one that Obama hopes to trump with a whole new round of meddling in the housing and jobs markets. In fact, the social experiment Obama has planned could dwarf both the Great Society and New Deal in size and scope.

There's a political root cause to this mess that we ignore at our peril. If we blame the wrong culprits, we'll learn the wrong lessons. And taxpayers will be on the hook for even larger bailouts down the road.

But the government-can-do-no-wrong crowd just doesn't get it. They won't acknowledge the law of unintended consequences from well-meaning, if misguided, acts.

Obama and Democrats on the Hill think even more regulation and more interference in the market will solve the problem their policies helped cause. For now, unarmed by the historic record, conventional wisdom is buying into their blame-business-first rhetoric and bigger-government solutions.

While government arguably has a role in helping low-income folks buy a home, Clinton went overboard by strong-arming lenders with tougher and tougher regulations, which only led to lenders taking on hundreds of billions in subprime bilge.

Market failure? Hardly. Once again, this crisis has government's fingerprints all over it.

Here is a quote from Mein Kampf:

"The fight which Fascist Italy waged against Jewry's three principal weapons, the profound reasons for which may not have been consciously understood (though I do not believe this myself) furnishes the best proof that the poison fangs of that Power which transcends all State boundaries are being drawn, even though in an indirect way.
The prohibition of Freemasonry and secret societies, the suppression of the supranational Press and the definite abolition of Marxism, together with the steadily increasing consolidation of the Fascist concept of the State--all this will enable the Italian Government, in the course of some years, to advance more and more the interests of the Italian people without paying any attention to the hissing of the Jewish world-hydra.
"The English situation is not so favorable. In that country which has 'the freest democracy' the Jew dictates his will, almost unrestrained but indirectly, through his influence on public opinion."

I would really like to get a simple QSL or verie from R. Bulgaria. After listening to that station for months and years, I finally heard a transmission, intended for Europe, on which I could understand a little bit of what they hosts were saying (their sound on English transmissions is uniformly muffled and audio-challenged). I wrote down the scant details I could, and went to the RB website ~ and I found this. They must be kidding.

This, from the R. Bulgaria website:

"Reception report

Dear listener of Radio Bulgaria,

The good news is that in order to become a member of Radio Bulgaria's Monitoring Club and receive the 6 QSL cards in the series you have to fulfill the following requirements:

For the FIRST QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for January and THREE for February.

For the SECOND QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for March and THREE for April.

For the THIRD QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for May and THREE for June.

For the FOURTH QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for July and THREE for August.

For the FIFTH QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for September and THREE for October.

For the SIXTH QSL CARD you will have to submit THREE reception reports for November and THREE for December.

A valid reception report should cover at least 15 minutes of our broadcasts on any frequency and at the time you prefer, and should include details of the contents of the broadcast and SINPO rating.

Upon reception of the full set of 6 QSL cards, you will also get the Monitoring Club Membership Certificate of Radio Bulgaria.

Letters and reception reports should be sent within the period specified for each QSL card."

It takes years to understand a single word of what these people are saying, and then for a single QSL they want SIX in two months? Forget THAT!

On their website there is a listing of DRM transmission on 9400KHz at 1530 UTC. It is interesting if anyone hears that and if it is better than the regular broadcast.

Reading some posts subsequent to mine, I should like to clarify some facts.

The GE Superadio was introduced in 1978; this first model was not officially called 'Superadio' but was so designated by several writers, one of who wrote the article in POPULAR SCIENCE in which I first read about it. I bought it soon after reading that article and I got the 7-2880A model. This does not have "Superadio' anywhere on it and it does NOT have antenna screws or the battery retaining strap.

Later, as I explained above, I bought a second one; this turned out to be the 7-2880B which DOES have antenna screws as well as a battery retaining strap. Otherwise, there is no difference between the two models and reception as well as construction quality is the same.

Then the next version was introduced, in the early to mid-80s as I recall. That model, the 7-2885 in all its letter permutations, DOES feature the name 'Superadio II' on its front grille. While its reception quality is slightly better (only very slightly and only noticeable on close side-by-side comparison) and its sound quality on FM is better (it, like the SR-III, has two speakers instead of the one found on the SR-I), its construction quality and its reception consistency is abysmal.

I cannot comment on the GE version of the Superadio III as I tried mine only once and that was almost twenty years ago!

I CAN comment (as I did!) on the current RCA version. While in theory it should be capable of excellent AM reception, I strongly recommend that people who wish to actually use a radio for listening and/or DXing (as opposed to collectors or those who merely wish to make comparisons) AVOID this model UNLESS you can find it for around $20.00. As I stated, I paid $20.66 - and that was ALL I paid. Amazon paid for the return shipping (twice!) and for the re-shipping to me. You can bet they "lost their shirts" on that transaction! $50.00 or even $40.00 is far too high a price for this radio as currently being (so poorly) manufactured, at least in my opinion. Anything higher than $50.00 is outright theft!

Here, for Gregg who wishes to compare this radio with another one he owns, is something to think about: unless you have more than one of these RCA models, you'll never know whether or not yours is functioning correctly, achieving the maximum reception of which it's capable (when made right). An obvious defect, such as I experienced, is easy to spot. The reception deficiency I noted on my first sample of the SR-II was not immediately apparent and I'm afraid that something like that can occur again. Obviously that would 'color' any comparisons.

With apologies to all who have read this far, I'll repeat - unless you can buy this radio new for a VERY low price, avoid it. And I wouldn't even consider buying one used!

Best,

Joe

I'm shocked, shocked to find that off-topic is going on here. The last time
I met with Michael Black he demanded that I get off the net and maybe off the planet for the sin of an off-topic post. He did this in the nastiest way possible. The Black Doctrine was that no off-topic posts were ever to be countenanced and the offenders were to be driven off with as much meanness as possible.
My view was that in times of poor propagation when there was nothing much going on it was quite suitable for radio people to discuss items of general interest. And wht do I find? The self-appointed Himmler of the net
flagrantly breaking his own dictat and posting broadcast band material on the Shortwave site. Oh the humanity! Oh the hypocrisy!

The original GE SRIII (and the "newer" RCA badged version (RCA and GE are co-owned by the same overseas company... that USED to be Philips.. but it's anyone's guess these days)) have grave quality control issues. For starters, I've YET to see one with anything like calibration, let alone ACCURATE calibration. With my 40 years of experience doing consumer electronics repairs, I can't even get them close to proper tracking and/or calibration.

Second, the mainboard circuitry is hit and miss. I've seen several of these, right out of the box, that had no AM (some with no FM) and/or had a hiss or squeal in either the broad or narrow position, or both.

Third, the cabinets mostly sound like there's a rattlesnake nest inside, especially when the bass is cranked up.

Other than that, they make a damn fine paperweight.

Well, the way I look at it - is my radio is a TRUE General Electric - the first of the firstest. Conrad Jutson knew what he was doing no doubt. I don't know the answer to this, maybe BA or Joe or Dave would
- but I wonder how much the GE P-780 would cost today if made in the US. I had an old ham friend give me a ballpark figure in his mind because he was in the radio business - and I couldn't help but just shake my head.

Ha! I don't know if you really feel that way or was just trying to get a reaction. I'll play. ;-)
Actually here in the Nati' - talk radio preempts baseball. I feel lucky to reside in Cincinnati for many reasons but the one I feel most gracious for and actually take for granted is the talk radio. I'm sure every city has talk radio but from the afternoon with Bill Cunningham all the way through to the midnight show with Steve Somers and The American Trucking Network - it's just real good listening and everyone is local.

That's why I like to tune to other cities and listen to their homegrown talent, you learn alot about those areas by their talk radio IMO.

That's absurd. We were quite able to tune a 5 tube All-American from 540 to 1600 in the twist of the wrist. KTAR next to the first triangle, KRIZ was next to the second triangle. KUPD was in the middle. Nobody had any trouble knowing where on the dial "their" station appeared.

I've read what Michael has said in some other posts about why he didn't like the older radios. I couldn't really put myself is his place because I only have experience in the specific Hammars I own and some of my older but newer analogs. But I didn't really understand when he said about losing your spot or however he said it.

I never had a problem finding the exact same spot after I left a specific freq - only took a second or two - and now with the freq counter it's exactly the same....spot on as having a digital. I know it doesn't take long to spin my wheel and I'm there. I'm not familiar with some of the pieces he was speaking about - maybe they just flat out sucked and gave him a bad taste?

The P780 was designed and built in the US c. 1958-62.

Your GE was made by an Asian manufacturer. If it's pre 1987, it's likely a Panasonic plant.

Thomson was an original partner in GE. It's all quite incestuous.

I would expect it to be similar to Radio Romania's DRM broadcast which is intended for Europe. I can hear Romania in DRM here in the Midwest.
It is FM quality when it is locked in, but it drops out completely about 10% of the time. The 25 meter analog broadcasts beamed to North America are 100% copy with just a little fading and background noise.

I will listen to Bulgaria and see if it is any different. Eibi lists DRM at 1730UT instead of 1530UT, but I will try both.

The only station I know of from Europe that does a DRM broadcast beamed to America is Vatican Radio from 2300UT-2330UT on 9755kHz. It is FM quality and stays locked in under good conditions with only a few momentary distortions.

Huh? From 1960-65 if I remember right. These are the best links on that specific radio. They all come from the first link though.
Of course, this is the opinion of the guy in the article, but he states.....
Q. Out of all the GE transistor radios you are familiar with, which do you feel offered the best performance, and why?

The AM reception on my P780 is far superior to any radio, home or auto, that I have experienced, including the best Toshiba models that I marketed. Of course, the P865 (which added an FM band to AM in a P780 case) provided wider performance but there were many models that came along later that offered outstanding features and performance.

Panasonic quality went to Crap! on a Panasonic RF-2600 AM/FM/Shortwave radio I bought new at a Service Merchandise store.A few years after I bought that radio it got to where it won't stay on station, tune in a station and you can see the tuning knob physically move, off station.Then, it got to where it won't turn on at all unless I wedge a little bitty piece of something between the earphone jack and the plastic case.
Panasonic, HUMPH!
I still have that radio too, I hardly ever use it though.

I have some old tube type car radios.Those old AM car radios from the 1950's are some of the best AM radios.Mount one inside of a metal box and use a 12 volt battery and you have a good AM radio to use in your home.

Why not use one of those old CB radio power supplies? Should be plenty of them around from the CB days. Even have one out in the garage somewhere when the kids were into that sort of thing about 35 years back.

From memory they output around 14 volts and should have enough current to drive an old valve radio. I might even have one of those old valve radios around here somewhere as well.

Most of the AM stations around here are just talk radio now. Only one worth listening to is ABC Melbourne on 774. The topics under discussion are often quite interesting. The rest of the stations are just plain dull.

I'm only just beginning to look into the possibility of getting set up to receive DRM.

Does "FM Quality" have some special meaning with DRM?
As I understand it DRM30 isn't really capable of anything one could really truthfully call "FM Quality", even on MF let alone HF. But maybe it's the official name of one of the modes.

Yup, Saddam did that but basically minor harassment on his part, hardly a reason to start an almost TRILLION dollar war.

> * Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction, and programs to

Pure bull$hit. You don't commit American lives and a trillion dollars on "alleged". Ultimately, Bush and Cheney admitted on national TV that there were NO WMDs.

On top of all that, you talk about "security in the Persian Gulf region."

Us being there threatens the "peace and stability" of the region because first of all, a war can hardly be defined as peace, now can it? More importantly, when we leave the region (if we ever can), the Shiites, Sunni and Kurds who still hate each other, and will start the biggest civil war you have ever seen, hardly leading to "peace and stability" in the region.

This all goes back to Bush Junior having NO exit strategy when he started this fiasco -- and there is still no exit strategy.

I won't even talk about the fraudulent "yellowcake" lies.

> * Iraq's "brutal repression of its civilian population."

Huh? This is a reason to spend a trillion American dollars and THOUSANDS of American lives? Who put us in charge of Iraqi civilians?

Besides, if we followed your fractured "logic" above, we would be at war with 20 or 30 additional countries that don't treat their civilian population nicely.

> * Iraq's "capability and willingness to use weapons of mass > destruction against other nations and its own people".

Well, sorry. WE (the USA) sold Saddam the chemicals to make the poison gas they used on the Kurds. And Rumsfeld has the receipts to prove it.

> * Iraq's hostility towards the United States as demonstrated by > the alleged 1993 assassination attempt of former President George H.

So? A LOT of countries are hostile to us and many because of G.W. Bush's fake war. It is a matter of public record that Bush hurt our image abroad more than any president in history. (And there you go with that "alleged" again).

> * Members of al-Qaeda, an organization bearing responsibility for

Again, PURE B-U-L-L-$-H-I-T!!! They were NOT "known to be in Iraq" at the time the war started. (Are they in Iraq now, seeing as we have destabilized the country? Maybe.) You obviously missed the national TV broadcast when Bush/Cheney said "there was NO al-Quaeda in Iraq". (or were they lying then, too?)

LOL! A little clean audio would help! I listened two nights ago - on 11600, their German and French transmissions were clear and understandable - I speak neither language, but I could plainly make out words and phrases and could have easily written a report based on those. Then the English came on, and the hosts sounded like mud.
WTF? The prelim ID/freq recitation and music sounded fine...

You might want to consider a radio that has a synchronous ("synch") detector, which greatly reduces the audio distortion you hear when an AM signal fades due to multiple signal paths arriving out of phase at your antenna. I'm not familiar with most portables currently on the market because I already have enough portables. These portables, although no longer made, have good synch:

Sony ICF-2010
Drake SW8
Grundig Sattelit 800

If you can find one of these used, give it serious consideration (of course there's always a risk with used radios). I have a Sony ICF-2010 and it's an excellent portable for MW DX although it has mediocre audio.

The Sony ICF-SW7600GR, which I think is still being manufactured, is decent but is not as good as the ICF-2010 for DX.

Although it lacks synch, the Panasonic RF-3100 (no longer made) is very nice for MW listening. It has decent sensitivity, acceptable audio, and is just plain fun to use.

I bought one of these new when released. Still use it. Fun. Nice performance, though not exactly a Drake. Good desktop for dragging

Ahem....the Chicago delegation would like to remind the Gentleman from California that a banquet in Cicero has been planned in the honor of the Marxist Mafia.

We'll provide the Louisville Sluggers.

Bruce,

The idea of course is to get people to actually listen to their programming on a regular basis. As others have said, more than likely, their real listening audience in North America is probably under 10. Still wouldn't hurt to send a QSL request along with a few bucks to help with postage and handling and see what happens.

Why am I not surpised that violence is being theatened? ;-) And after the Marxist Mafia was actually voted in by the people! Such unconstitutional behavior - break out the tanks and the nukes!

It's the Chicago way. Note that the Marxist Mafia is talking about putting the National Guard on the streets of Chicago to handle local crime.

Thanks - Yeah, that's what I did. I actually rather enjoy listening to some stations once or twice a fortnight (RNZI gets my ear at least a couple times a week and I like both R. Prague and R. Romania I.), but when the audio is so bad, what's the point?

I wish the USPS still sold IRCs. I'd be happy to send them a couple of those each time. I have no idea how these different countries handle Yankee bucks...

Of course, back in the Cold War days, getting a response was easy -
I got not only a QSL but also a pennant, a schedule, and about twenty pounds of glossy propaganda magazines in brown kraft paper wrappers to boot! Man, those things smelled funny...probably be classified as hazmat these days...

With the support of 70 percent of its citizens, Arizona has ordered sheriffs and police to secure the border and remove illegal aliens, half a million of whom now reside there.

Arizona acted because the U.S. government has abdicated its constitutional duty to protect the states from invasion and refuses to enforce America's immigration laws.

"We in Arizona have been more than patient waiting for Washington to act," said Gov. Jan Brewer. "But decades of inaction and misguided policy have created an unacceptable situation."

We have a crisis in Arizona because we have a failed state in Washington.

What is the response of Barack Obama, who took an oath to see to it that federal laws are faithfully executed?

He is siding with the law-breakers. He is pandering to the ethnic lobbies. He is not berating a Mexican regime that aids and abets this invasion of the country of which he is commander in chief. Instead, he attacks the government of Arizona for trying to fill a gaping hole in law enforcement left by his own dereliction of duty.

He has denounced Arizona as "misguided." He has called on the Justice Department to ensure that Arizona's sheriffs and police do not violate anyone's civil rights. But he has said nothing about the rights of the people of Arizona who must deal with the costs of having hundreds of thousands of lawbreakers in their midst.

How's that for Andrew Jackson-style leadership?

Obama has done everything but his duty to enforce the law.

Undeniably, making it a state as well as a federal crime to be in this country illegally, and requiring police to check the immigration status of anyone they have a "reasonable suspicion" is here illegally, is tough and burdensome. But what choice did Arizona have?

The state has a fiscal crisis caused in part by the burden of providing schooling and social welfare for illegals and their families, who consume far more in services than they pay in taxes and who continue to pour in. Even John McCain is now calling for 3,000 troops on the border.

Police officers and a prominent rancher have been murdered. There have been kidnappings believed to be tied to the Mexican drug cartels.

There are nightly high-speed chases through the barrios where innocent people are constantly at risk.

If Arizona does not get control of the border and stop the invasion, U.S. citizens will stop coming to Arizona and will begin to depart, as they are already fleeing California.

What we are talking about here is the Balkanization and breakup of a nation into ethnic enclaves. A country that cannot control its borders isn't really a country anymore, Ronald Reagan reminded us.

The tasks that Arizonans are themselves undertaking are ones that belong by right, the Constitution and federal law to the Border Patrol, Immigration and Customs Enforcement, and Homeland Security.

Arizona has been compelled to assume the feds' role because the feds won't do their job. And for that dereliction of duty the buck stops on the desk of the president of the United States.

Why is Obama paralyzed? Why does he not enforce the law, even if he dislikes it, by punishing the businessmen who hire illegals and by sending the 12 million to 20 million illegals back home? President Eisenhower did it. Why won't he?

Because he is politically correct. Because he owes a big debt to the Hispanic lobby that helped deliver two-thirds of that vote in 2008. Though most citizens of Hispanic descent in Arizona want the border protected and the laws enforced, the Hispanic lobby demands that the law be changed.

Fair enough. But the nation rose up as one to reject the "path-to-citizenship" — i.e., amnesty — that the 2007 plan of George W. Bush, McCain, Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama envisioned.

Al Sharpton threatens to go to Phoenix and march in the streets against the new Arizona law. Let him go.

Let us see how many African-Americans, who are today frozen out of the 8 million jobs held by illegal aliens that might otherwise go to them or their children, will march to defend an invasion for which they are themselves paying the heaviest price.

Last year, while Americans were losing a net of 5 million jobs, the U.S. government — Bush and Obama both — issued 1,131,000 green cards to legal immigrants to come and take the jobs that did open up, a flood of immigrants equaled in only four other years in our history.

What are we doing to our own people?

Whose country is this, anyway?

America today has an establishment that, because it does not like the immigration laws, countenances and condones wholesale violation of those laws.

Nevertheless, under those laws, the U.S. government is obligated to deport illegal aliens and punish businesses that knowingly hire them.

This is not an option. It is an obligation.

Can anyone say Barack Obama is meeting that obligation?

http://buchanan.org/blog/whose-country-is-this-3955

The Arizona Uproar

Listening to the national uproar, you'd be forgiven for thinking that Arizona has marched into the civil rights apocalypse with its new state law cracking down on illegal immigrants.

Last Friday, Arizona Governor Jan Brewer signed SB1070, making it a crime to be in the state illegally and requiring cops, where "reasonable suspicion" exists, to determine a person's legal status.

Rev. Al Sharpton is promising to come to Arizona to march, the New York Times says that the state has gone "off the deep end," and the Nazi references are flying. Los Angeles Cardinal Roger Mahony likened SB1070 to "German Nazi and Russian Communist techniques."

Riding the noise for political advantage, President Obama is summoning his Justice Department to look into the matter, saying that the law would "undermine basic notions of fairness that we cherish as Americans."

But 70 percent of Arizona residents support the law, according to Rasmussen.

What's going on here? Do we know something the rest of the country doesn't?

Actually, we do. Context is everything, and it'd be nice if the national media provided some, rather than simply slamming Arizona as a redneck haven filled with nativists and bubbas with a hankering for racial profiling.

An estimated 500,000 illegal aliens live in Arizona, and many are decent folks, to be sure. But the border is still wide open, and many more are coming. Last year in Border Patrol's 262-mile-wide Tucson Sector, agents arrested 241,000 illegal aliens, a drop of more than 130,000 from 2007.

It sounds great until you understand that gotaways outnumber arrests by three to one.

Does the country realize this, or have the people bought Janet Napolitano's political fairy tale that border security has been "transformed" from where we were in 2007?

As Obama lectures Arizona, citizens here await his decision on an urgent request to send three thousand National Guard troops to the border. Senators John McCain and Jon Kyl recently asked for soldiers, as did Democratic Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords, to bring some security to American citizens being hammered by cross-border smugglers and thugs.

Here's an important bit of context: This isn't your father's illegal immigration, when polite farm workers offered to do chores in return for some water and a sandwich as they walked north. Today, the drug cartels have taken over the people-smuggling business. They own the trails into the country and dominate the land, the same way urban gangs control neighborhoods

Any group wanting in has to deal with them, and the going rate is $2,500 per person. If you don't have the cash, the cartel coyote will offer to bring you in for free if you carry his dope. As Cochise County Sheriff Larry Dever testified to the Senate Homeland Security Committee last week, most of the groups coming up now have a gun behind them.

Along the Chiricahua Corridor smuggling route north and east of Douglas, Arizona, residents have been screaming for some time about break-ins, threats, intimidation, vandalism, and home invasions. But the feds did nothing to keep citizens safe. Instead, they talked amnesty. Then the inevitable happened.

On March 27, Cochise County rancher Rob Krentz was murdered on his land, presumably by a drug smuggler. The death occurred on a well-known drug trail, and trackers followed the killer's prints back into Mexico. He is still at large.

Now, I can't argue with those who say that SB1070 has some provisions that smack of desperation -- such as making it a crime to stop your car to pick up a day laborer or to enter a stopped car to get temporary work. That sounds impossible to enforce.

But critics also say that it will have no impact on besieged residents of southern Arizona, and I disagree. It could help.

We have a huge problem with crooks coming up from Mexico to our cities and towns, committing crimes, and bolting back south of the border. Not long ago, I wrote a story that backtracked the records of two of these border coyotes and found that between them, they'd been arrested and released by either law enforcement or the courts a total of 35 times.

One was let go after a traffic stop, and the other had worked construction in Phoenix for years. If this law had been in effect, the police might've been able to get them off the street before they were able to lead more groups into southern Arizona, break into homes, and frighten citizens.

Civil rights? What about the civil right of American citizens to drive up to their homes at night and have some reasonable assurance that no one is inside?

On March 31, four hundred people gathered outside the one-room Apache School to tell their elected reps what it's like to live in smuggler-occupied territory. The meeting was held there, in the cold, open air, in part because the nearest place to host a group that size inside was seventy round-trip miles away, and these folks didn't feel comfortable leaving their homes for that length of time.

They live by a rule of thumb: If you leave your house empty, it will be occupied by illegals or drug smugglers. We're not talking just about homes five miles from the international line. We're talking about homes up to sixty miles north of the border.

Racial profiling doesn't matter much when you're in a fight to preserve your way of life and keep your family and property safe. Let me give you a different perspective on racial profiling. Now, when Border Patrol chases down and arrests illegals south of I-10, everybody says, "Atta boy. Good police work."

But if these crossers put a toe north of I-10, they're home free. Except for Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio, nobody is looking for them, and if you do, it's racial profiling.

The farther you get from the line, the more people want to make this problem about race. It's the ground the left wants to fight on because it's so effective. Political correctness shuts people up and keeps the border open.

Arizona has had enough and seen enough. This bill, admittedly flawed, motivated in part by anger and frustration, is an effort to step in and do something about a serious national problem on our southern border that grows more dangerous all the time.

But the national media largely ignore it because it offers up the wrong victims and the wrong politics. They don't send reporters out to Arizona get the story, to walk the smuggling trails, to sit with beleaguered Americans at their kitchen tables and understand the torment their lives have become.

Instead, they adopt the preening pose of the self-righteous, screaming from a safe distance about the bubbas. All 70 percent of them.

It's more fun than context.

Nope. SB 1070 does not address border security at all, nor does it empower local authorities to deport anyone.

I wonder who in AZ provides employment for a half million people?

Throw a few of these employers in jail and their fellow criminal employers will fire all of the half million illegals.

not that easy. If you want a law suit filed against you for racial discrimination by the state or the feds, or you could be sued by Chicanos por la Causa or La Raza for being racist. Also all of these people have documentation, it may be forged documentation, but how can you tell. Simple solutions are for simpletons. The flaw in the e-verify system was there was no picture of the individual in the database, but maybe in the future they will have some sort of system where employers can actually find out if the employee is illegal or not. When the feds bust an employer, they actually have some pictures that go with the social security numbers, something the employer had no access to. Sound unfair, or course it is. BTW, do the feds have a picture of you, "Sid9"? If not an illegal could have a forged a social security card with "Sid9" "555-11-5555" or whatever your number is, and how would the employer tell if it was you or someone else, unless there is a picture to go with it?

Oh, pardon me - murderous crybabies with guns.

Peter, I am just sick and tired of extremists categorizing what is demonstrably a middle-of-the-road liberal administration in what is, by world standards, a pretty far right wing government, as somehow Marxist and Communist just because the current leader is not their idea of a stereotype aging white male and he'd rather use compassion than greed to approach problems that need solving. Even more, that because of their grumpy dissatisfaction and the fact that they were trounced gently but decisively in the last completely provably legal election by a majority of the citizens of this nation, that they have somehow a right or obligation to take up arms and create riots and revolution because they do not have enough patience or trust in their countrymen to constitutionally select a leader and administration. It is disgraceful and unpatriotic and unAmerican and a slap in the face to every real patriot and serviceman who ever fought for this country, including my father and his brother.

When GWB was elected by the Supreme Court, nobody on the left that I heard of suggested this type of foolishness, even though it was transparently a farce. We took it like adults and waited patiently, if vocally, while that idiot stood by and watched the nation spiral downward while the right cheered him on and watched the richest people become untouchable while the income gap widened inexorably to where it is now, an economic train wreck.

What the hell is wrong with you people? No shame, no compassion, no decency, just greed and the most selfish of intent. Son of a bitch.

False.

You will not be sued for complying with the law.

You document your activity as an employer.

Get the crooks who exploit the illegals and the illegals will go home.

Probably only need a few widely publicized examples and the problem disappears.

The "real ID" law was passed and many states have opted out.

Libertarians oppose, what in effect, is an internal passport.

About three years ago, the oil level in my lawn mower was down about one cup of oil.I put some Valvoline 10 - 30 oil in there.I knew it says on top of the cap, Use 30 Weight Oil Only.That B HO ButtKisser across the street said, You put the wrong kind of oil in there! That lawn mower (I have two lawn mowers now) still runs as good as new.Last Summer, there was a problem with his lawn mower and he doesn't know anything about fixing a lawn mower.He told one of his sons to be on the lookout for a good used lawn mower.He bought a pawn shop lawn mower for $65.00.Just wait untill that front wheel drive transmission on his pawn shop lawn kicks the bucket, and it will, sooner or later.

Last Summer when I HAD to build two fences on my yard to keep those B HO ButtKissers (they (((''they'')) live next door to me, both sides of my house) from driving on my yard and parking on my yard, he said, The wind is going to blow that fence down!

Last Summer when I was using my comealong to put my 1914 Ford Model T car on my old trailer, he said, That wheel is going to fall in that hole!

Yes Sir, he is the World Authority Expert on everything.He broke my chainsaw.He didn't even know how to find the oil drain plug on his lawn mower, he asked me, Show me where that oil drain plug is!

The answer is to go back to what America had prior to 1965: a national origins based immigration system (wherein immigration from any country was allowed only to the extent of that nationality's percentage of the already existing American population), and a race-based definition of citizenship (see the Naturalization Act of 1790, in force until the 1950s). Under such a system, no complicated set of ID documents would be required -- just a good pair of eyes.

Of course, Central Americans of European descent would easily be able to sneak through -- but then, they aren't the ones causing problems, are they?

I know that the Arizona (and other) patriots who want to stop the invasion from the south fall all over themselves denying that they have any racial motivation. But if all they really care about is "what's legal," they might as well quit all their fussing and go home and watch "Dancing With the Stars."

For "what is legal" can change in a nanosecond -- the moment the criminals in Washington declare their "amnesty," every invader will instantaneously become "legal."

And then what will the patriots do? Become honest, and admit that this is a biological issue, of one people displacing another people and taking their territory and resources? I hope so. Without honesty, no solution is possible.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

"...The Chinese Exclusion Act was repealed by the 1943 Magnuson Act, which permitted Chinese nationals already residing in the country to become naturalized citizens. It also allowed a national quota of 105 Chinese immigrants per year, although large scale Chinese immigration did not occur until the passage of the Immigration Act of 1965. Despite the fact that the exclusion act was repealed in 1943, the law in California that Chinese people were not allowed to marry whites was not repealed until 1948...."

So, a question..

Is the chuffing noises seemingly audible over the UK at least between about 13mhz and 23 mhz some kind of over the horizon radar, as per the old woodpecker we used to get in the cold war days, or is it something else.

If it is, who is doing it?

Yes indeed.

And the fact that many treaties were not kept redounds to our shame as a people -- and constitutes a lesson in the corruption of the Washington regime that all peoples should learn.

The Republic of Lakotah, which declared its independence from the Evil Empire some years ago, shows that Russell Means and his people are far advanced in their thinking and morality compared to most European-Americans. My hope is that we will catch up soon.

How did Mississippi get it's name

Mic Ziki

Ojibwe Indians?,,, Chippewa Indians?
Who knows??? The French, Messipi? A loose translation from some Indians, in my opinion.

Mississippi River starts in Minnesota, about eleven miles West of Wisconsin and winds on and on and on way down South (South is always Best) and into the Gulf of Mexico and into the Ocean, dig out your old Rand McNally and LQQK.

That married Irish woman wayyyyyyyyyy over yonder across the big pond, sometimes she calls me Sippi Gator,,, I likes that.

What land do you live in? In the US there are professional minorities that make a living doing just that. And to say that you "will not be sued" for anything demonstrates your tenuous grasp of the reality of the legal system. You can be sued for pretty much anything.

OK. I should not say FM quality. Vatican is mono at something like 17kBits/sec. Very quiet and clear compared to an HF broadcast as long as it stays locked in.

Disco Palace relayed by Bonaire is something like 24 kBits/sec in Stereo. I think Radio Australia is 24kBits.sec / mono or stereo - can't remember. However I have never got Australia to lock in, only enough signal to get transmission information displayed. Also, these numbers are from memory.

I am guessing these broadcasts are DRM30 since this is the mode recommended for shortwave broadcast. All I can give you is the station data encoded in the signal and dispalyed in the Dream software box.

From now on I will give the info dispayed by the software with any reception reports. I have not listened for Bulgaria yet. That will be the first report if I can receive it.

We need to abandon the Left/Right paradigm and the two criminal parties.

Both gangs support these illegal and immoral aggressive wars, and both support the destruction of our freedom and privacy in the name of "national security." Seeing, and acting on, those two truths -- across traditional political divisions -- is the beginning of real change.

Code Pink, a women's anti-war group, has already reached out to the Tea Party folks in hopes of understanding and collaboration. That is a most hopeful sign, as was the racial right's support for Cindy Sheehan.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

I know, the rhetoric is just so oxymoronic, histrionic, self-cancelling and frankly, retarded. The government is run by politicians, like governments everywhere, and there is a wide array of ideologies who nonetheless tend to lump into two and occasionally three categories. Those categories, when compared to one another, "appear" to be at great contrast based on rhetoric and posturing, but in reality they are only fractionally apart from each other when compared to others worldwide. The devil is in the details, of course, but the rancor and bluster of one side, usually the side who is not in power and is feeling temporarily disenfranchised, make it sound the end of civilization. I agree with Kevin Strom on this one, at least in principal - we need to get beyond this utter crap.

Dear Cuhulin,

I'm the same way - I keep all of my 'junk,' pack it up, and put it in my crawl space. I have so much 'garbage' in there I can't even remember all of what I have!

That's why I still have all of my GE/RCA 'Superadios.'

The best of the lot are my two original ones, the 7-2880A and 7-2880B. One of my three 'Superadio II' samples is good also; it is still in current use.

As for my 'Superadio IIIs,' I can't comment on the older (early 1990s) GE one but the new RCA one is, frankly, trash. The one I have is my third sample from Amazon and, while it's pleasant for listening to FM and it CAN receive long-distance AM, its tuning is so poor that DXing is rendered useless, in my opinion.

For $20.00 or thereabouts, okay; anything more - NUTS!

But I won't sell it. (Among other things I couldn't do so with a clear conscience.) One of these days I'll pack it up (I don't know why I put the box in the crawl space without really giving the radio a fair trial - now I have to go in there and retrieve it!) and put it away.

My heirs will have to deal with it!

Best,

Joe

While I don't subscribe necessarily to any of the philiosophies of the groups you cite, Kevin, I certainly agree in principle. That is, as long as the governed show a sense of responsibility to each other (which has not always been the case, and which at its core is why we have laws to start with).

Mediocre, and besides, in my job I now find myself suffering in the day-to-day, face-to-face arena with people with whom I used to be able to have reasonable discussions but who now follow the tea party mentality, in which one angrily shouts irrelevant questions (because it feels good to be angry and vent) and then really don't want to hear any answers, because it's easier that way.

I am tired, and have no energy at the end of the long days for DX.

This is partially debatable, but I won't go into paleobiology and paleoclimatology at this point. They did get here by purely natural means, which allowed not only humans but many other species to advance their ranges. What Nature allows, I don't question.

I am a strongly pro-American, mostly-capitalist but limited-socialist myself. I'd bet a billion dollars that at their cores, most other people are as well. Any person with even rudiments of nuanced brain patterns should be able to comprehend this situation - it's basically what we've been for the last 200+ years, with variations.

> Isn't corporate welfare a form of fascist socialism way more plausible

It's like Mussolini said...a more accurate name for Fascism would be corporatism. That's not really what we have, but I can see tendencies toward that in many quarters.

You may be interested to know that in previous decades, burning oil slicks across vast reaches of the ocean was theoretically thought to be a way to steer hurricanes away from populous areas. I you ever have a chance to see the wonderful Frank Capra - Bell System 1958 movie "The Unchained Goddess" it briefly describes the process, shortly before discussing the threat of global climate change, by themn already a well-developed theory and a source of rising concern among climatologists, even conservative ones.

I can relate. From here on the other side.

Recently redid the wiring in the house, improved grounds and replaced all the boxes, conduits, sockets and other implements of connectivity.

It quieted down my listening environment considerably. Putting the T-1 router in an RF tight environment, and running all the CAT52e in grounded conduits did a lot to clean up the tropical bands, too.

Now, I need to scrape together the time to relax with my radios.

The MTA is not as sensitive as other antennae I've used, but it's so quiet, with correct grounding, that once the environmental noise floor is dropped, the signals I can capture are fully 6db lower than I could with more sensitive antennae.

Now I'm curious what a Wellbrook would do, here.

We know who told the morons that.
It's from Propaganda 101: reversing the facts.

"The cleverest trick used in propaganda ... to accuse Germany of what our enemies themselves were doing. ...the typical characteristics of German propaganda are lying, crudeness, reversing the facts and the like. "
--Dr. Joseph Goebbels, Nuernberg, 1934

In his propaganda campaigns, Goebbels used all forms of the media but stressed radio.

Radio?
USA Today/Gallup poll -RUSH LIMBAUGH is the REPUBLICAN'S LEADER!
"Who speaks for the Republican party?"
LIMBAUGH...In every catigory: Both Republicans, Dems agree.

Uncanny, huh?

The insane twist the facts to fit their world view.
The rational change their world view to fit the facts.

Good show, and good luck with all of it!

I am thinking the same thing...I take a l'il portable around the house, and every outlet and switch buzzes; I use my AM loop inside, and whenever it's aimed "toward" the mass of the house, it induces a buzz. I am 99% sure the polarity all needs to be corrected (the guy who owned this house before me was a reckless do-it-yer-selfer and none too bright - like that fellow Cuhulin is always complaining about).

I may need to try a Wellbrook too, although with the RF stew around this joint, it may not be of great value anyway. I think my only hope of real DX anymore is DXpeditions, far, far away.

Sometimes, there's some oxide on the screws to the outlet, and/or the ground tang. Or the physical connections between the conduit and the box, and you'll get hum. Often, it's as easy as resetting the screws. Sometimes, you may need to replace, or re-install things.

But if you're getting it on every outlet, there's likely something on the line that's creating the noise. If you plug in a high draw device, like a 500w halogen and the noise diminishes, then, you've got something in plugged in in the house that's creating the noise you're hearing, and it needs to be either bypassed (.01 ufd caps across the device or across the diodes in the power supply will do it), or it needs to be isolated with a transformer.

I can, without reservations, recommend the MTA. Since it's passive, there is no chance of overload. And because it's so quiet, it can hear signals other antenna put in the stew.

Wonderful..the US government will be able starve billions of people into submission via drought. Better than Agent Orange any day.

Me? I think it's evil. Mind you, nowadays it's not popular to hate evil. Hating evil is unpatriotic and gives comfort to the enemy. In fact, it's traitorous to hate evil.

The Republican candidate is Tim Burns.

He is a politician by definition (because he seeks a position of influence in government). And yet he claims on his website that he "is NOT a politician".

This means two things:

1) That he is a liar.

2) That he obviously thinks that there are enough gullible people who would vote for a politician, to appoint him to be a politician for their district, who says that he "is NOT a politician".

I personally would not vote for such a dishonest liar.

Sadly, this is nothing new.

The "Lady in Red" said she would blow the whistle on John Dillinger if the government wouldn't deport her back to Romania.

Guess who got a free trip to Romania even though she held up her end of the bargain.

We lied to the people we were supposed to support for the Bay of Pigs invasion.

We screwed the Hmong for their help in the Viet Nam war.

We screwed the Kurds TWICE with broken promises.

It seems the word of the government isn't worth very much.

...and the beat goes on.

Totally on topic...as you referred to people being lied to.

And as long as we are still spending dollars and American lives on these two non-winnable fiascoes, the needle ain't stuck.

There is a listed relay broadcast earlier on 9800 kHz at 1945-2030UT from Vatican via Canada. This was not monitored.

Here is the signal and transmitted information from the DRM Vatican broadcast on 9755 at 2300UT and the earlier DRM Radio Canada broadcast on 9800kHz.

Radio Canada on 9800kHz @ 2100UT - DRM signal S9+25dB
Info: 17.16 kBits/sec / EEP AAC+ Mono / CA
Message box: From Sackville, NB Canada for your listening pleasure
Audio: No dropouts. A few quick intermittent distortions.

Vatican Radio on 9755kHz @ 2300UT - DRM signal s9+20dB
Info: 14.56 kBits/sec / EEP AAC+ Mono / VA
Message box: We are sending a DRM transmission on SW 9755kHz for North America from Vatican Radio Santa Maria di Galeria-Vatican City
Audio: Periodic dropouts. Multiple intermittent distortions.

Appears the broadcast comes from Europe but can't guarantee it. Will check the relay broadcast tomorrow if I can.

Hey James, sorry - this thread kind a got a little long and I missed your post. The Radio Shack DX398/Sangaen 909 is a portable.

I bought mine new and was very dissapointed in the performance and even the sound- but along came Chris Justice and RadioLab and they took care of that for me. Other than my DX394, I have never had a radio that was kind of a dog and sent it away to be modded. I figured if the manufacturer couldn't do it right from the beginning someone else could. What an incredible job they did to that piece, just about EVERY function on that radio was noticeably improved which shows the maufacturer didn't do it right from the beginning like they should have for the buyer. It looks like from Chris' site that the 398 modded out by them is even cheaper than I remembered. I think I paid a little over three hundred dollars for mine, maybe three thirty something {?} and then sent it off to be modded, but it really is a great radio and the real nice indigo blue light they added is badass and looks sharp with the lights out. Let us know what you decided on.

I used to vote Republican, but, unfortunately, the Republican party has greatly decayed morally. This "I am NOT a politician" politician is a good example. I would like to see the Republican party reborn as

Hey James, I was just looking through their site at this link and it caused me to break my 398 out.:-) I keep mine in my BOB - hardcase (Bug Out Bag) with 50 ft. of wire and pair of headphones and spare batteries. You never gave a price point on your OP - but IMO (especially with the price 'included' with the mods) this would be the piece you'd want.

There really is nothing this radio can't do, great on SSB/ UTES / FM Music sounds like their inside your radio - Any digital mode you may want to decode (it sucked on SSB before the filter mods). With the newer bigger speaker/ bigger magnet the audio just smacks the crap out of the original speaker. Before the mods, just using the whip wasn't suffice....technically I don't know the reason why, even if I had my little coupler around the whip and then clipped on my external I expected more but it didn't deliver. After the mod, it came to life -
I don't use the external antenna jack - I use coupling for my antenna setup - seems to eliminate any type of hash better...at least for me.

The different audio setups/ normal/ music / talk - the changes they made with the audio are so good that I keep it set on "music" - for everything, incredible audio.

You really can't go wrong with this receiver IMO, it delivers on everything one would want in a portable and it is even cheaper now with the mods already done if you buy from Radio Labs, I can promise you that you won't be dissapointed. Now I hope the send me a $50 voucher for shilling for their company. ;-)

http://www.examiner.com/x-2398-Boston-Top-News-Examiner~y2010m4d12-Scott-Brown-disses-Palins-Boston-Tea-Party

Brown hitched his wagon to the Tea Party to get himself elected, but he simultaneously distanced himself from the group as the special election to replace Ted Kennedy neared. As Talking Points Memo and the Boston Globe reported back in January, Brown brushed off questions from a Globe reporter about Tea Party activists and groups.

Upon assuming office in February, Brown immediately shifted to a moderate stance and broke the vaunted GOP filibuster his election was supposed to ensure by voting for a Democratic sponsored jobs bill.

Here is a good internet friend of mine, his name is David. He has many vids on different subject matter. The main parts I guess is survivalsim and his farm with goats. If you look at all his vids you'll see where he ate a good side of ribs from his one goat.

I didn't know about 'registered' goats and all that so I've learned quite alot from Dave, his different goat vids helped a schmuck like me who wasn't raised in that stuff. Enjoy his vids and take on the gubiment and militia etc. One of his vids - I went to the website about what he was talking about and printed out the list to take to any store to see where the product actually originated from (barcode list)....VERY few come from the US sadly:-(

He's in the same neck of the woods as you Cuh.

Exactly. I know for a fact I have a qsl from them, but it's been a while back. I know from my notes that I didn't send them a tape which is odd because during that period I was on the kick of sending the stations solid proof of my contact, must have been short on microcassettes or money that week. {?}

Is it worth the money to buy the SE3?? Can it really pull out the weak ones?

Please give some practical experiences if possible!

One does not preclude the other.

McVeigh may have been followed, encouraged, guided, and then taken advantage of -- with extra explosives as "insurance," as the efficacy of a truck bomb some considerable distance from the building was naturally doubted by the experts involved.

I was listening to the radio in the minutes and hours immediately after the event, and there were definitely reports of additional bombs inside the building -- which stands to reason, considering the massive damage.

It was also extremely suspicious that McVeigh, shortly before the attack, placed a number of apparently pointless telephone calls.

He (if indeed it _was_ he and not a helpful "associate") did this using a phone card sold by Liberty Lobby, a right-wing populist group. He called a long list of right-wing and pro-White racial organizations a few days before the bombing, typically leaving messages and asking -- almost begging -- to be contacted. The tally of organizations he tried to contact is very similar to those on the SPLC's alleged "hate group" list.

It would be as if Lee Harvey Oswald had sat down during the first weeks of November, 1963, and made dozens of telephone calls attempting to set up meetings with every left-wing group on the House Un-American Activities Committee list -- and did so from the lobby phone at Americans for Democratic Action.

McVeigh's association with Nichols was probably not part of his handlers' plans, since it vitiated their claim that the bombing was the work of "racists." (Nichols was in an interracial marriage.) So McVeigh clearly had a considerable degree of freedom of action, and was not operating under direct orders.

But a patsy nonetheless? I say that is very likely.

Cui bono? Those who wanted increased government power to monitor, infiltrate, and stifle dissenters. (Legislation that presaged the Patriot Act -- itself triggered by a later, possibly false flag, event -- was pushed through after OKC.) Those who wanted to demonize radicals who question the Empire. Those who wanted -- and still want -- to demonize groups that demand self-determination.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

I agree about having LOCAL talk show hosts, I am getting so sick of the national syndicated stuff. The local host knows the concerns of the callers and talks about local issues along with national issues.

Gregg,
I am in South Florida, near Jupiter, one mile from the ocean. I have four boatanchors, all restored/recapped: HQ-145XC, Lafayette HE-10, Hallicrafters S-38, Knight Star Roamer. My portables are: RF-2200, CCrane SW/AM, SR-III, DX-440. My wife says that "enough is enough" now! Now, I am using an old Dell Inspirion 1000 to listen to WPHT, 1210, out of Philly due to TWO Cuban stations on the frequency, one from Miami and the other from Cuba itself!

ANFO has occasionally been used in terrorist bombings. First used in 1970 by student protesters at the University of Wisconsinï¿½Madison, who learned how to make and use ANFO from a Wisconsin Conservation Department booklet entitled Pothole Blasting for Wildlife,[2][5] the ANFO car bomb was soon adopted by the IRA, such as in the 1993 Bishopsgate bombing. It has also seen use by groups such as the FARC, ETA, and various terrorists when they first tried to destroy the World Trade Center in 1993. A more sophisticated variant of ANFO (with nitromethane ammonium nitrate as the fuel called ANNM) was used in the more successful 1995 Oklahoma City bombing. Improvised bombs made with agricultural-grade AN are less sensitive and less efficient than the explosive-grade variety.

In November 2009, a ban on ammonium sulfate, ammonium nitrate and calcium ammonium nitrate fertilizers was imposed in the Malakand Division - comprising the Dir, Swat, Chitral and Malakand districts of the North West Frontier Province (NWFP) of Pakistan, by the NWFP government, following reports that those chemicals were used by militants to make explosives.

In April 2010, police in Greece confiscated 180 kilograms of ANFO and other related material stashed in a hideaway in the Athens suburb of Kareas. The material was believed to be linked to attacks previously carried out by the "Revolutionary Struggle" terrorist group

In January 2010, President Karzai from Afghanistan also issued a decree banning the use, production, storage, purchase or sale of ammonium nitrate, after an investigation showed that militants in the Taliban insurgency had used the substance in bomb attacks [6] [7] [8].

Hello,

I must have made an error, but I suddenly was under 1620Khz on sw.

I know about other Kchibo radio's with about the same design, tuning wheel + up/down knobs, so it could exist in other models.

The trick is the following (software "feature", but a nice one):
- set the radio on sw
- tune it to eg 1850Khz
- set it to fast tuning mode
- now with the </> buttons (NOT the tuning wheel) tune down to 1800, 1700 and 1600. With fast tuning and the < button you go 100khz down at a time.
- normally the radio stops tuning on sw when you're on 1620khz, but because of the "trick" you go under 1620, and can now tune with slow/fast 100khz, 1khz or 5khz at a time. You can tune downto 270khz (I hear Prague radio), 252 is the Irish, and RMC seems to have left 216. I hear something on 50khz, and between 70khz and 80khz it seems to be full too...
- the radio DOES NOT use the ferrite bar, but the whip, and the tuning sounds cleaner than with the ferrite bar. The signal strenghth is also much larger...

This makes the Kchibo a better LW radio in my garden than the sony icf-sw2010D (!)

For the sync detection part of the radio: seems to be Ok, and better than my old 2010D, which is unstable...

I bought this radio from http://madeinchina.com (delivery was 10 working days + 1 week due to the Island disaster = 3 weeks).

An Englishman, a Scotsman, and an Irishman walk into a pub together.
They each buy a pint of Guinness. Just as they are about to enjoy their creamy beverages, a fly lands in each of their pints and gets stuck in the frothy head.

The Englishman pushes his beer away in disgust.

The Scotsman fishes the fly out and continues drinking as if nothing happened.

The Irishman also picks the fly out of his drink, but then holds it out over the beer and yells, 'Spit it out! Spit it out, you little bastard!'

I never had an RF-2200, but various reviews say it's one of the best MW portables. My guess is that it's better than the RF-3100 on MW, although the RF-3100 is no slouch.

Agreed! The non-Whites who are chimping-out over Arizona's law freely admit that their main concern is for their RACE. The unspoken truth is that this is a non-White vs White issue, as are so many other political issues these days. Non-Whites are not afraid to stand up and organize for their own race. Unless Whites stop being a bunch of grovelling cowards, afraid of being called "racist" by a bunch of (essentially) left-wing Marxist thugs, and start standing up for themselves AS A RACE, Whites will utterly lose the country and civilization that they founded and built, and will be persecuted to near extinction.

They handle as many of them as they can. Most international amateur

A classic example of fear and paranoia!

Because he/she is uneducated and incapable of doing anything useful, he/she fears these illegal immigrant farm workers

An American in London was out hitting the pubs with friends until the wee hours of the morning. When the pubs closed he couldn't find his friends, so he decided to walk back to his hotel. As he walked along in the cold, he suddenly had an irresistible desire to pee. Looking around, he saw an alley, and he stepped into it's shadows. He had just gotten his pants unzipped, when a "bobbie" walked up to him and said."You can't do that here sir, come with me". The "bobbie" lead him down the alley to where there was a tall fence. Pulling one of the boards aside, the "bobbie" said."Just in here sir". The American stepped into a beautiful garden of tall trees, flowers, and a pond reflecting the crescent moon. As he was relieving himself, he was struck by the beauty of the grounds. Having finished his business, he stepped back through the fence to the waiting "bobbie". "Is that what you call English hospitality?". asked the American. "Naw", said the bobbie,"It's what we call the French embassy".

(Raising hand) I have a question - whoever said anyone was gonna get free any of these things? I pay close attention, and I don't remember any of that...except from conservatives who CLAIMED somebody said it.

I did, however, pay a lot LESS tax last year than before. I was taken aback too, because not only do I deserve to pay more to support the important things provided by government, but if I don't, many things normal Americans take for granted (and things that I personally value) will collapse.

I guess it did not have a passband control on it?

I have an R75 that has ordinary synch-det (Kiwa modified to make the darn thing work), and using this plus passband is a mighty good combination. Pretty much rock-solid.

Will the teary eyed ones have any compassion left when everything they've

There's a move afoot to do exactly that, by people who call themselves "conservatives." "Conservative" here though, is really what was classically called "liberal"--one who is prudent (not prudish) and thoughtful; avoiding excessive risk; conserving, as in responsibly husbanding resources, not wasting or wasteful; fiscally responsible; motivated to improve the human condition for all, and so forth. You know, like a conservative design--something built solid, with margins of safety.

The Tea Party seeks to encourage statesmen who vow to be faithful to the principles of smaller government, more liberty, and to the Constitution.

It's a beautiful thing.

The government gets in the way?

The government just saved every American's ass with quick decisive action to prevent another Republican Great Depression.

Mexicans are a trivial problem.

Scapegoating them for Republican mismanagement, since Reagan, is only a cover-up for the damage they've done to all of us.

There's no work here fewer Mexicans are coming in and many are leaving....no big expensive fence needed.

Well, what do you expect? Are you one of those who maintain we did negro slaves a favor by introducing them to our wonderful Western Civilization? Twisted Europeans and their collective megalomania have laid waste to the planet.

Maybe they heard you...

I listened to the 2300UT English broadcast on 9700kHz and the modulation was good. A few pops in the audio but completely copyable.
There was a strange artifact in the signal. In the background was a ringing noise similar to the bells on the Voice of Greece only audible during voice portions.

I switched to 11700kHz around 2315UT to check reception. Noise was noticeably higher with weaker signal. Modulation looked about the same but there was some fading. No backgound ring on this frequency.

We need more sunspots. Still have not listened to the DRM broadcast.

Hindsight is 20-20, but we'd be much better off today if we simply left them alone in Africa with flies crawling all over their faces.
Unfortunately, now we're stuck with a permanent class of violent-prone

If you actually READ the FBI statement responding to Kincaid’s request for Stanley Dunham’s FBI records, it should be immediately apparent that the FBI did NOT admit that it destroyed any file on Obama’s grandfather. This 26 March 2010 FBI letter reads, in part:

“Records which may be responsive to your Freedom of Information-Privacy Acts (FOIPA) request were destroyed on May 01, 1997. Since the material could not be reviewed, it is not known if it was responsive to your request.”
- http://www.usasurvival.org/docs/dunham.pdf
- http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=139737

Please note that the FBI only advised that “records which MAY be responsive” were destroyed in 1997, but it is NOT KNOWN if they actually apply. From this kernel of truth, Kincaid has once again fabricated evidence against Obama. The FBI letter did not “admit” that it had destroyed his grandfather’s file, nor did it even confirm that it ever had an FBI file on his grandfather. The FBI did NOT know if the 1997 destruction even contained a file on Dunham.

Nevertheless, Cliff Kincaid misrepresented the FBI’s vague response as an ADMISSION that it had destroyed his grandfather’s FBI file. This is the essence of trumped-up evidence: blatant misrepresentation of evidence (the “big lie”). Other disinformation campaigns may depend on viral rumors that are amplified with each embellishment, or carefully designed false implications.

This is just another of Kincaid’s redbaiting campaign, similar to the trumped-up accusations from AIM regarding the 1949 Honolulu NAACP incident (see http://my.barackobama.com/page/community/post/Kaleokualoha/gG5kN7). In reporting that incident, as in reporting this incident, source documents belie Kincaid’s claims.

They each tell a “big lie” regarding public documents, seemingly confident that nobody would have the audacity to research their claims. Just as Kincaid misrepresented the Congressional testimony of rookie Honolulu NAACP board member Edward Berman, so too has Kincaid misrepresented the FBI response to his Freedom of Information Act request. Kincaid’s minions drink their kool-aid eagerly, because Cliff Kincaid is preaching to his own private choir.

For some reason, however, fewer websites have echoed Kincaid’s claims this time. Although there are 89,000 hits for “berman Honolulu naacp davis,” there are only 12,000 hits for “fbi admits dunham file.” It seems the fringe is less receptive to their “Ministry of Truth.”

Perhaps they are learning (albeit belatedly) the difference between professional propagandists (like Cliff Kincaid), and authentic journalists who adhere to the Society of Professional Journalists Code of Ethics (http://www.spj.org/ethicscode.asp).

"The men the American public admire most extravagantly are the most daring liars; the men they detest most violently are those who try to tell them the truth."

Here's the funny part - I can never get a good copy on their earlier NAm broadcasts. They are even worse, for me, than their later 11600 to Europe.

At 2300 there is nothing but a weak het on those freqs. Sun's up high, too early for the west coast.

Very interesting. I don't know whether Kincaid or you is right -- but I do know that the FBI often lies.

Mencken would have put virtually all politicians -- both McCain and Fetchit certainly included -- in the "daring liars" category.

This is simply normal for "democracy" and its phony "elections."
When one must appeal to a mass of selfish morons firmly attached to the media teat in order to win, lies are of the essence.
Truth-tellers are those, like Mencken, who point such things out.

Dave, you're simply wrong. The operation was most certainly not wasted. Within days of the Oklahoma City bombing, unconstitutional legislation giving power to the police state and taking away our freedoms was already in the works.

As I reported in April 1995 on my radio program:

'The Associated Press reported yesterday "Several Senate Judiciary Committee members joined in the call for more legislation to combat terrorism amid reports that domestic terrorists in recent years have become capable of disseminating information via the Internet on how to make powerful explosives." Now who do you think generated those "reports?" Is there even the slightest shred of evidence to support the idea that those who set the bomb in Oklahoma City used the Internet? Those who want to take away our freedom of speech are using our grief to get us to give up our freedom. Details about explosives are available in every large library. Should we censor our libraries? U.S. Army field manuals, printed and sold by the U.S. Government Printing Office, give the same information. Someone is lying to you, my friend.'

And, also in April 1995, I reported:

'The _Washington Post_ reported yesterday, "Ronald K. Noble, undersecretary of treasury for enforcement... told [a Congressional] panel that the annual toll of bombings in the United States has more than tripled in the past decade, reaching a high in 1993 with 49 deaths and 1,323 injured. And there are believed to be several hundred `violent white supremacist groups' in the country, along with a milita movement in at least 34 states that is `virulently anti-gun control and anti-federal government,' he said." Lies, lies, lies. Notice the tie-in between over 1,000 bombing victims and "White supremacists" and militias, which Mr. Noble suggests but does not explicitly state. He does not explicitly state it because no link exists -- not a single one of those people was killed by a militia member or a so-called "White supremacist" group. Someone is lying to you, my friend.

'And what do the liars want? According to wire service reports, President Clinton has called for: money to hire 1,000 new agents, a wider range of electronic surveillance, stiffer penalties, relaxed standards for allowing infiltration and informers, increased ability to trace phone calls and check credit card and other records and use of the military in domestic cases. Use of the military against American citizens -- that has got to be the final straw. In Waco they insisted that U.S. Army insignia be removed from the equipment before it was to be used, but perhaps in future that will no longer be necessary. As in the Soviet Union, the people may become inured to the use of the Army against citizens.'

Also from the same broadcast, April 1995:

'They are pushing for their so-called "Anti-Terrorism Bill." They want more black-helmeted goons working for nameless agencies most of us haven't even heard about, armed with automatic weapons which we are not allowed to have, with the legally-sanctioned power to attack and possibly kill Americans that criminals like Janet Reno or Bill Clinton or their hidden masters merely _suspect_ of lawbreaking. They want the power to unilaterally declare, without trial, that certain groups are "terrorist" and criminalize Americans who donate to them. They want to subject patriotic, loyal Americans to the most advanced spying, wiretapping, and surveillance apparatus that has ever been known. They want _carte blanche_ to infiltrate _agents provocateurs_ into groups they merely _suspect_ of lawbreaking.'

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Actually, the "Jesus" in the Bible tales is highly unlikely ever to have existed, but taking the stories at face value I find no statement from him demanding that property or wealth be taken from one group of people and forcibly given to another -- which is the practical essence of state socialism.

He did say, "Slaves, obey your masters," though -- so perhaps I am wrong and he was a socialist after all.

I do agree with you there. Those used to be the essence of conservative values, before conservatism was taken over by the reptilian-looking neocons. They have made America hated more than ever before and are the best recruiters for al-Qaeda that could possibly be imagined.

Now the neocons are trying to take over the Tea Party movement, converting an anti-statist movement into just another front for the obscenely bloated Zionist-yoked American military machine, which is arguably the greatest shame of our nation.

With my best,

So why was it not followed by some radical action? Like when Bush used

This is more crude than has ever been spilled before. It is in an eddy off the Gulf Stream, part of the main thermohaline circulation current around the planet. Specific gravity and salinity are critical to the THC's ability to regulate global temperatures.

This will also screw up a major part of the marine food chain.

It astounds me that you can actually believe that.

All of them are criminals in the sense that they are, by definition, violating our pathetically weak immigration laws.

And we know that -- in addition to those merely running from incredibly corrupt and criminal governments and impoverished, wrecked nations -- some of them are on the run because of their violence and crimes in their homelands, and find it more congenial to be in the United States when "the heat is on" back home.

Furthermore, we know that 83 per cent. of murder warrants in Phoenix are for illegal aliens -- and 75 percent of those on their most wanted list are illegal aliens. So a huge number of these people are indeed criminals on several levels.

http://tinyurl.com/2b92s66

These people also come from a culture that engenders rape on a mass scale.

http://tinyurl.com/28xh4s5

It is estimated, according to Tim Johnson of the McClatchy Newspapers, that _six out of ten_ migrant women is raped in Mexico. That indicates to me that a huge percentage of the Mestizo population falls into the criminal category. I don't want them bringing the culture -- or the genes -- that cause such behavior into my nation. I don't think it's a good idea for us to become like them, which is what _will_ happen over time if we permit the invasion to continue.

Of course, I have absolutely nothing against the immigration of Spanish-speaking, Spanish-descended people into the United States. They can come here in unlimited numbers with my blessing. But, as much as I like them, I don't think we should allow the civilized Spanish of Central America to send their surplus underclass population into our nation.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

ANTARCTICA, LRA36 R. San Gabriel Archangel, 15476 kHz, heard at 1445z this morning here on California's western shore. Talk in SS and Mx heard, weak but steady signal with SINPO = 15141. This was quite awhile after local sunrise; I think an earlier tune-in would/could be beneficial. With an all-water path skimming along S. America's west coast and a nice background low noise level, that 10 kW signal does a decent job. AOKI shows this station as being on only at a completely different time slot, but what the heck - no need to complain if they aren't butting heads with anyone (15475 appears to be unused this summer so far) and it provides a good opportunity to hear that icy wasteland in its late fall-winter season.

At that time, also weakly heard at that time on 15480 was (presumed) Dem. Voice of Burma via Yerevan. Armenia. Although it uses a 300 kW transmitter, it was more or less the same quality of signal as LRA36. TX direction and pathway are everything!

My guess is that Jesus, whatever He was according to history, was

At the risk of great oversimplification, I think our nation - and all nations - should pressure the most highly defective governments on the planet to straighten up their operations and begin to serve their people instead of their own pockets. The US government isn't perfect by any means, but I work with people from C. and S. America who claim that the US is paradise compared to the incredibly corrupt and disgraceful majority of governments south of the border; and I have no reason to doubt them.

I am not sure that our immigration laws are that weak right now - I think they are poorly enforced, however. If fixing the law to enhance enforcement is proposed I am all for it.

I am greatly conflicted about what to do with the illegal immigrant people who have already arrived. Sending them back seems cruel; having them stay here allows us to eat cheap produce; ideally they could be assimilated into the usual US culture and become contributing members of society. I cannot say whether this is realistic, as I do not claim to be a sociologist. OTOH, they are illegal, after all, and the continuation of that condition is pretty unacceptable. Their genes do not concern me, I am frankly convinced long ago that people are fundamentally products of their environment, and that any person is going to be most strongly influenced by the examples set by their parents and the society of their peers; but some of the customs and habits I find quite offensive, especially in regard to their basic treatment of others - humans and animals (having said that, I find some of our own European/US customs and habits quite offensive too - but no need to make matters worse).

Of greatest concern to me, however, is overpopulation, pure and simple. Not just here, but across the globe. It helps very few people or the environment, causes great harm for most, and let's face it, no other large mammal:

1 - was or is 7 billion strong, anywhere, at any time;
2 - has such a gluttony for resources; and
3 - is so incredibly capable of altering the fabric of the biosphere.

The effects are both global and local; and I am greatly concerned about the US becoming another huge land crushed cheek to cheek with humans. It ain't healthy for people or anyone else.

This is a problem easily solved. Read the FBI letters provided by Kincaid, then read Kincaid's misrepresentation of the letters. They are at http://www.usasurvival.org/docs/dunham.pdf. This is just another element of the disinformation campaign against Obama.

BTW: Davis was not a drug dealer. That trumped-up charge was fabricated by WND from an "anonymous source" to implicate Davis, just like charges of Iraqi mobile weapons labs were fabricated by "Curveball" to implicate Saddam.

He doesn't say anything to me anymore, GOOD!.He looked around at the front of my house.

He knows I do a GOOD job working on my house, he also knows he broke my chainsaw last Summer.He knows where to find that oil drain plug on the bottom of his lawn mower too.Last Summer I showed him where it is, he didn't know, he was too damn lazy to look for it.

Vatican relay broadcast from Canada
9800UT @2000UT DRM signal S9+15dB
Info: 17.40 kBits/sec / EEP AAC+ Mono / VA
Message box: blank

Audio: No dropouts. Very few intermittent distortions.

So, it appears there is no way to prove where a DRM signal comes from. The info area shows the Vatican (VA) as the source but there is no indication it is relayed by Sackville other than signal quality.

You mean America is no longer the world's supercop, seeking and out security, not entirely.

Gotta protect the Jew at all costs. Keep that footprint in Israel. Not
